Denham Asks Court to End Coal Tie-Up By Injunction

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The Federal Government went to court yesterday to stop John L. Lewis from "clubbing" the mine operators into accepting an "illegal" contract.

Effect of the injunction move, if upheld by the court, would be to ban the three-day work week imposed on the coal industry by John L. and the United Mine Workers.

Even so, John L.'s 480,000 miners would still be free to strike part or all of each week for other purposes, such as higher pay or shorter hours.

Republican leaders in Congress, who have been demanding that President Truman invoke the "national emergency" provision of the Taft-Hartley Act against the miners and enforce an 80-day period of full coal production, were hardly appeased by the Government's court action.

Solution Is Doubted

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), coauthor of the management-labor relations act, branded the court maneuver as being ineffective in getting the miners back to work on a full production basis. Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), who's leading the drive for a congressional resolution urging the President to apply the Taft-Hartley Act in the coal dispute, said that the court move would not solve the immediate coal situation.

President Truman himself sat tight, despite a growing clamor from Capitol Hill and various areas of the country that a lack of coal was creating a midwinter crisis. Mr. Truman holds that there is no "national emergency" insofar as the over-all coal supply is concerned.

Went to White House First

Robert N. Denham, general counsel to the National Labor Relations Board, who sought the court injunction against Lewis yesterday, disclosed to a press conference that he had been in touch with the White House before taking the legal action, but that neither pressure nor suggestion on what course of action to take had been attempted.

General Counsel Denham filed his petition with the United States District Court here, charging John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers with certain illegal practices under the Taft-Hartley Act, and asking the court to restrain Lewis and the UMW from conducting such practices until the NLRB can get around to investigating and deciding the merits of the charges—a process which would

Plane Propeller Gashes Both Legs Of Virginia Youth

A Groveton (Va.) youth was injured about 4 p. m. yesterday when the whirling propeller on his two-seater plane cut deeply into the muscles of both legs at Beacon Field Airport, Groveton.

The victim is John Lawrence, 20, formerly of Toledo, Ohio, but living at Groveton since his recent discharge from the Marine Corps at Quantico, Va. He was rushed to Alexandria Hospital under State police escort by an unidentified friend who was in the plane.

Another witness, Harry Lehman, an airport official, said Lawrence spun the propeller, but apparently did not allow himself enough clearance.

Physicians said muscles of both legs above the knee were gashed. They doubted the injuries would be permanent. His condition after surgery was described as "good."

Battle Asks for $45 Million To Help Virginia's Schools

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Jan. 18.—Gov. John S. Battle, in his inaugural address today, asked the General Assembly to act immediately to help him keep a 45 million dollar campaign promise for new schools in Virginia.

To give the State a school system "second to none in the fundamentals of education," he asked that two-thirds of the total be appropriated right now, with 15 million dollars to be made available next year in outright gifts to localities.

Battle noted that his predecessor, William M. Tuck, recommended that the first chunk be made available by July 1.

The new Governor said "immediate action is imperative" to make funds available "at the earliest possible moment."

The 59-year-old former chairman of the Senate Finance Committee kept one eye on the prosperous Virginia treasury through-

Jury Receives Lewis Admission He Controlled 2 Telephones

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

A District Court jury yesterday received an admission by William "Snags" Lewis that he owned three telephones and 14 adding machines seized during a raid March 5 on the home of Mrs. Sadie Stanton at 4310 46th st., Bladensburg, Md.

The admission was introduced in evidence in District Court in the form of two stipulations between Lewis' counsel, William H. Collins, and Assistant U. S. Attorney William Hitz.

Judge Alexander Holtzoff told the jury the admission was equivalent to testimony from the witness stand.

Lewis, alleged chief of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate; Attilio Acalotti, the self-styled "Mayor of Thomas Circle," and Frank Bilieci, circulation man for the Washington Times-Herald, are being tried on charges of operating a numbers lottery.

The stipulations climaxed an 11-month effort by the Government to prove that Lewis controlled the alleged gambling room where he and 13 others were arrested.

In November, when Lewis and the 13 stood trial on charges of conspiracy, two separate witnesses denied that Lewis had any con-

Heart Experts May Urge Inoculations

By N. S. Haseltine

Heart specialists in their first national conference here may recommend inoculation with German measles of all marriageable women, it was learned yesterday.

Purpose of the measure would be to reduce the risk of bearing congenitally deformed children which threatens women first exposed to the virus in early pregnancy.

The specialists were reported to be considering also public recommendation of induced abortion in women who get German measles within the first three months of pregnancy.

Medical specialists have reported that when a woman contracts German measles (rubella) between the eighth and about the thirteenth week of pregnacy there

F. and M. Senior Admits Slaying Of Stenographer

Lancaster, Pa., Jan. 18 (AP).—State police announced Edward Lester Gibbs, Franklin and Marshall College senior from Pitman, N. J., tonight signed a statement admitting the slaying of Marian Baker, 21-year-old college stenographer.

The police quoted Gibbs, 25 and married, as saying he picked up Miss Baker a week ago last Tuesday and struck her over the head with a lug wrench.

Gibbs attempted to hide the body beneath leaves near the lonely cottage where the body was found on Saturday, according to the statement. He then went back to school, obtained a shovel and returned to where he had left the body. He attempted to dig a grave but found the ground too hard, and shoved the body partly beneath the cottage, he said.

Reds Slow Down Berlin Elevated In Reprisal Move

Berlin, Jan. 18 (NYHT).—Traffic on Berlin's elevated rail system was slowed down considerably today by the Russians, who acted in reprisal for the American-ordered seizure last night of the former Soviet-controlled rail headquarters in the American sector of the city.

Willy Kreikemeyer, director of the Soviet-controlled railway, said the slowdown would continue until the United States removes West sector policemen from the rail building. Only thus could workers gain free access to the important rail switchboard, he said, and resume direction of normal elevated rail traffic.

The slowdown was underlined by the last-minute refusal by 12 Soviet officials of invitations extended for a reception given by the three Western high commissioners. The Russians said they "will be too busy attending to railway troubles" to spare time for the party.

Gen. Arnold's Funeral Today; Friends Pay Last Tribute

General Henry H. (Hap) Arnold, architect and commander of America's mighty World War II Air Forces, received the last tribute yesterday of hundreds of friends and former airmen.

Clad in the light blue uniform of the new United States Air Force, General Arnold lay in state from 1:30 p. m. to 10 p. m. in the dimly lighted chapel of St. Andrew of Aramathea in Washington Cathedral. By 5:30 p. m. 615 persons had filed by the flag-draped casket to gaze briefly into the calm face above the rows of brilliant ribbons earned in 35 years of service.

An honor guard of soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines flanked the bier on both sides and at head and foot. Only two modest floral pieces stood beside the casket, evidence of General Arnold's own request that friends who wished to memorialize him do so by contributing to a scholarship for airmen. At the head hung the national colors and at the foot General Arnold's personal flag, five white stars on a blue field. In the dim crypt before which the casket rested, four candles flickered

Guatemala Asks Editor To Prove Radio Charges

Guatemala City, Jan. 18 (U.P.)—London Editor Kenneth De Courcy was invited by the Guatemalan government today to visit this country and confirm his recent statement that Russia has radio stations and submarine bases in Guatemala. The government has officially denied the statement.

De Courcy, editor of the Intelligence Digest, who predicted the recent atomic explosion in Russia, said on January 14 that Soviet agents had set up a secret base off Guatemala where long-range submarines could be refueled.

The Guatemalan Embassy in London was instructed to advise De Courcy all his traveling expenses would be paid if he made the trip.

Vote Is Set Friday on House Rules

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A "who killed cock robin" fight over FEPC, with both political parties trying to pin the blame in advance of the deed, yesterday overshadowed a floor showdown this week on the House Rules Committee's bid for more power.

House Democratic leaders slated action on the rules change for Friday, three days before the Administration's fair employment practices measure would normally be subject to a House "discharge" vote.

The decision to call up the so-called Cox resolution, handing the Rules Committee back all of its old pigeonholing powers, touched off the round of political buck-passing, and advance obituaries for FEPC.

Shun Responsibility

Plainly, neither political party wanted to accept the responsibility for killing it in the face of Mr. Truman's appeal for action now. In yesterday's furious round of House debate and party conferences, only Southern members said for quotation that they wanted to bury it deep.

Democratic leaders coupled their move for a prompt vote on the rules shift with a formal statement by House Democratic Caucus Chairman Francis Walter (Pa.) that House Democrats are "bound" to oppose the rules change. Walter said no further Democratic caucus is needed—that a caucus on the same subject in January of last year is still "binding" on Democratic members.

House Republicans later in the day had a full party conference of their own. At the close of it, Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr. (Mass.) said GOP House members were virtually unanimous against voting on the rules change this week.

"Republicans of the House are very anxious that I move to adjourn when the House meets on Friday," said Martin. "It would be very unfortunate to pass the (Cox) rule three days before FEPC could be called up, at the Speaker's discretion."

Would Put Rayburn on Spot

In effect, House Republicans were maneuvering to put Speaker Sam Rayburn (Tex.) and the Democratic leadership right back on the FEPC hot spot.

If the rules are not changed this week, House Labor Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) will move to "discharge" FEPC out of the Rules committee on Monday, under the present 21-day rule.

The man on the spot in that event would be Speaker Rayburn, who as a Southerner is personally opposed to FEPC. Rayburn has "discretion" to recognize Lesinski or some other committee chairman. He has not said whom he would recognize, but if the Cox rule is adopted by the House Friday no motions for "discharge" can be made Monday, and he won't have to pass on the question.

Speaker Rayburn has announced that he still favors the so-called Eberharter 21-day rule, which he supported last session. The Cox resolution would repeal this rule, and make it impossible for committee chairmen to force blockaded bills to a vote on special discharge days twice a month.

Senate Votes To End Oleo Taxes, 56-16

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The Senate, after knocking down civil rights and excise tax repeal riders one after another, last night voted to repeal all taxes on oleomargarine by an overwhelming 56-to-16.

The civil rights amendments, offered by Senator William Langer (R., N. D.), were beaten by the following one-sided votes: anti-lynching by 60 to 20; fair employment practices by 59 to 17; and the poll tax repealer by 59 to 17—all on votes to table.

All were opposed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other prominent Negro organizations.

The excise tax amendment, offered by Senator Hugh Butler (R., Neb.), was beaten by 43 to 32. A group of Senators who had voted against the civil rights riders and finally voted for the main bill, led by Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), supported the Butler proposal. Taft argued that the rider, if adopted, would force the House to vote out an excise tax repealer.

George Opposes Taft Plea

The Butler amendment called for going back to the lower 1942 excise tax rates on jewelry, furs, cosmetics, luggage, telephone, telegraph, airplane and train tickets, etc. It also called for repeal of the 3 percent tax on freight shipments.

In opposing Taft's recommendations, Chairman Walter F. George (D., Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee, said 'this is one way not to get excise taxes repealed." The repeal, George said, would cost more than a billion dollars in taxes—including 330 million for the tax on freight.

Both George and Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas assured the Senate it would be given a chance to vote on repeal of excise taxes and civil rights this session.

The oleo tax bill, which now goes to conference with the House, is similar to that passed by the House in the following:

1. It repeals all special taxes on margarine, some of which are 64 years old, and all more than 50. Included are taxes of 10 cents a pound on yellow and one-fourth of a cent a pound on white margarine.

2. Repeals all occupational taxes on the margarine industry. These are: $600 a year for manufacturers; $480 a year for wholesalers of yellow and $200 a year for wholesalers of white margarine; and $48 a year for retailers of yellow and $6 a year for retailers of white oleo.

Added Senate Clauses

Both bills require public eating houses serving margarine to (1) post a notice to that effect, and (2) serve it in triangular pats.

The Senate bill contains these provisions not in the House measure:

1. Requiring all margarine to be packaged in triangular shapes weighing not more than a pound a package.

2. One by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.) to require close inspection by the Pure Food and Drug Administration of all plants producing the raw materials from which margarine is made. By motion of Senator J. W. Fulbright (D., Ark.) this amendment was changed to include butter.

Voting for the repeal were 34 Democrats and 22 Republicans, while 12 Republicans and 4 Democrats voted no.

Myron Taylor Resigns Post As Truman's Vatican Envoy

Aging and ailing Myron C. Taylor, 76, resigned yesterday as President Truman's personal envoy to the Vatican, and thereby confronted the President with a new problem.

The problem was whether to let the Vatican mission lapse or to appoint a successor to the post Taylor had held for 10 troubled and war-torn years.

Some Protestant church groups have protested loudly at Taylor's presence at the Vatican, and have pictured it as violating the separation of church and state in the United States. But President Truman disregarded their protests in May, 1946, when he reappointed Taylor.

At that time the President said Taylor's mission had been "most helpful to the cause of peace and in the alleviation of suffering," and predicted that it would be "equally useful in the future."

Yesterday the President gave no hint of what he would do, although officials have found it diplomatically useful to have a representative of the President in Rome as a direct channel of communication to and from the Pope. The Taylor mission also has been a valuable listening post for the United States in view of the Vatican's world-wide sources of information.

The news of Taylor's resignation followed a visit he paid the President on Monday just after his return from Rome. There was no suggestion that anything but his age and health had led him to re-

Denfeld to Ask Retirement; Says He Received Commission

By Bert Andrews
NYHT News Service

Admiral Louis E. Denfeld will announce today that he will retire from the Navy on March 1, it was learned yesterday as a storm broke in the Senate over whether his ouster as Chief of Naval Operations was legal.

The storm was over whether the admiral had received his commission for a second term when he was removed.

Admiral Denfeld, reached by telephone at his home in Westboro, Mass., said:

"Of course I have my commission. It bears the date of September 14, 1949, and reappointed me for two years beginning December 15, 1949. It's signed by Francis P. Matthews and H. S. Truman. I suppose they'll say now that they didn't sign it."

He was asked about the argument that he hadn't actually been sworn in, and that the post of Chief of Naval Operations was thus vacant.

Vaughan Given Sharp Rebuke By Senate 5 Percent Probers

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, military aide to President Truman, was sharply criticized yesterday in a report by the Senate subcommittee investigating 5 percenters or influence peddlers.

Four Democrats joined with three Republicans in rebuking Vaughan for accepting deep freezers from a perfume manufacturer and for his friendship with John Maragon, described as an "outright fixer."

General Vaughan received the deep freezers in 1945 from David Bennett, president of Albert Verley Co., of Chicago. He then "made gifts" of some of them to Mrs. Harry S. Truman, Fred M. Vinson, now Chief Justice of the United States, then Secretary of the Treasury; John W. Snyder, now Secretary of the Treasury, then Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion; Matthew J. Connelly, Secretary to the President, and James K. Vardaman, now a member of the Federal Reserve Board but then White House naval aide.

The Senate subcommittee went out of its way to absolve the First Lady of any suggestion of impropriety in accepting a deep-freeze unit for the Truman home in Independence, Mo.

Cyclotron Yields Element No. 97, Heaviest Known

Berkeley, Calif., Jan. 18 (AP).—A new chemical element, hitherto unfound on earth, has been produced by one of the University of California's cyclotrons.

The new subtance is No. 97 in the roster of chemical elements. It is the heaviest substance known. It was made by bombarding curium, heretofore the heaviest substance, with the nuclei of helium atoms.

The discoverers, Dr. Stanley G. Thompson, Albert Chiorso and Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, noted nuclear chemist, suggested the new substance be called berkelium, after the university city. The name is not yet official.

What Element 97 may be good for is not yet known, but Dr. Seaborg reported it probably would not be suitable for use in an atomic weapon.

Its main significance thus far is that it supports the prediction of nuclear scientists that they probably will be able to increase the number of elements to 100 or more by atom-smashing methods.

U. S. Reaffirms Saar Control By France; Rebuff to Adenauer

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Secretary Acheson yesterday reaffirmed French economic control over the Saar Valley, the rich coal mining area of 738 square miles wedged between France, Luxembourg and western Germany.

He thereby handed the first American rebuff in months to Dr. Konrad Adenauer, the chancellor of the new West German republic. The French have been seeking 50-year leases on the Saar mines; Adenauer has objected that these would prejudice the eventual return of the Saar to Germany.

Although Acheson upheld the French position, he added words of caution to the French and Germans alike. He told his press conference that it would be very wise of the French not to take any action that would make difficult the relations between France and Germany, or the general integration of western Europe.

As for the Germans, he said,

McCarthy's Blast Delays Confirmation Of Sherman

Senator Sees Issue Of Whether Secretary Is 'Incompetent or Plain Untruthful'

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Questions were raised in the Senate yesterday as to the legality of Admiral Louis Denfeld's ouster as Chief of Naval Operations and the truthfulness of Navy Secretary Francis Matthews' testimony in the case.

The charges—made by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.)—brought a reopening of the Denfeld case and a further delay in the confirmation of Admiral Forrest P. Sherman as successor to Admiral Denfeld.

McCarthy, waving what he said was a photostat of a commission issued by President Truman for Denfeld's second term as CNO, declared that Matthews had erred in telling the Senate Armed Services Committee that no such commission ever was issued.

The Wisconsin Senator, a former Marine, said this raises the question of whether Matthews is "incompetent or just plain untruthful" and declared his appointment as Navy Secretary was a "political payoff" by Mr. Truman.

Republican members of the Senate committee, who had voted unanimously for Sherman's confirmation last week and declared they were dropping demands for an investigation of the Denfeld case, yesterday insisted that Matthews be recalled for a "full explanation."

Committee Chairman Millard Tydings (D., Md.) asked the Senate to hold up confirmation of Admiral Sherman, pending a check of the law and precedents on the right of the President to remove a high officer after commissioning him for a new term.

McCarthy had contended that Sherman—whom he praised as a "man of outstanding ability"—could not be confirmed as CNO because legally a question exists as to whether the office "is now actually vacant."

Tydings said he was "inclined to believe" that the President could remove a top officer even after he was commissioned for a new term. And he contended that Matthews was basically right as Denfeld never actually was sworn in for a new term as the Navy's top officer. Thus he was not "fully clothed by the office," Tydings urged.

The Maryland Senator tried to reach Matthews by phone during the Senate flareup, but found he was at his home in Omaha.

In Omaha, Matthews told the Associated Press that "there evidently is some confusion. I am

No Cause Seen To Alter U. S. Atomic Policy

By Alfred Friendly

Neither the Russian atomic explosion nor any new atomic developments here, "real or prospective," are reasons for changing the United States policy on international atomic control, Secretary of State Acheson said yesterday.

His comments, made in the course of his weekly news conference, would, on their face, indicate that even the hydrogen bomb—subject of intense secret debate in Washington—did not affect American policy considerations in negotiating with the Russians on atomic control.

Actually, however, the present undercover debate in the highest Federal quarters is precisely on the question how the hydrogen bomb may be used to promote a

Cold Front Due To Drop Mercury 30 Degrees Today

A cold front from the Great Lakes region hit Washington yesterday, and was due to drop temperatures 30 degrees by this afternoon.

After yesterday's near-record 66, the high today will be from 36 to 38 degrees—"and only if we're lucky," the Weather Bureau added. Today's early-morning low will be about 30 degrees in Washington and suburbs. The low yesterday, 35 degrees, came about midnight.

The 66, recorded about 3:45 p.m., was just one degree under the record of 67 degrees set for the date in 1929.

Besides overcoat temperatures, the Weather Bureau also called for cloudy skies and winds of from 25 to 30 miles per hour today.

Reuther Hits Realty Men On Housing

Post Reporter

Walter Reuther, CIO United Auto Workers chief, told Congress yesterday real estate interests would favor the Administration's "middle income" housing bill if they could control the spending under it.

Able for the first time to use his right hand for taking notes since he was shot by a would-be assassin, Reuther said the National Association of Real Estate Boards asked his cooperation in a similar plan almost a year ago. The chief difference, Reuther said, was that the NAREB wanted to control the plan.

Reuther declared it is "morally wrong as well as economically unsound" for parents to be penalized by having to spend so much in rent that they must deny their children other necessities. Decent housing makes for better workers, he said.

A nation which solved mass production of airplanes can solve mass production of houses if spurred by Government aid, Reuther told the Senate Finance subcommittee on housing.

Backs Aid for "Middle Third"

"Congress has provided aids for those at the top and bottom; this bill provides the first program for the middle third," Reuther said.

"The Government, through HOLC, FHA, the Federal National Mortgage Association and other institutions has aided the construction of homes for the upper income third. The Government, through passage of the Housing Act of 1949, provided for 810,000 units of low rent housing for those unable to pay an economic rent.

"The overwhelming majority in the CIO has fallen in between those whose housing needs have been neglected."

Bankers Charge "Socialism"

William A. Reckman, Cincinnati, Ohio, representing the American Bankers Association, charged the bill threatens "socialization of credit and the ultimate destruction of the private enterprise system." He testified his association believes the bill would favor special groups of borrowers, build a "huge bureaucracy," and resume "inflationary pressures."

Subcommittee Chairman John Sparkman (D., Ala.) noted the association has never endorsed FHA, either. Reckman agreed.

Bernard Weitzer, of the Jewish War Veterans, denied there is anything un-American in cooperatives or in any phase of the measure.

John C. Williamson, Veterans of Foreign Wars, like many other witnesses, asked for a new and separate Government agency to administer the bill.

Author Testifies

Dr. Leonard S. Silk, author of a book on Swedish housing cooperatives, said the measure may go a little further than necessary or desirable in offering subsidies.

Harry Held said the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks opposes the bill. He said the principle of direct competitive Government lending for mortgages on residential property was "unsound and unwarranted."

Drayton S. Bryant, California Housing Association, said housing cooperatives for middle income families would be an important strengthening of that group.

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) yesterday heatedly attacked operation of the Social Security Administration's Old Age and Survivors' Insurance.

At a Senate Finance Committee hearing on extending the coverage and increasing the benefit payments of old age insurance, Taft said that calling it insurance is a misnomer. He interrupted testimony by Social Security Commissioner Arthur J. Altmeyer to level his blast. He declared he is "getting more and more concerned about the amount of gratuitous payments going out of the Treasury."

Taft said President Truman's recent budget called for a direct increase of 1800 million dollars for the Federal Security Administration, and including dividend payments to veterans by the Veterans Administration, pay increases to Government employes, etc., provided for a total of 6169 million dollars.

Without the veterans' dividends, he said, "gratuitous payments in the new budget would amount to 3500 million."

"There is no basis for saying people are paying for old age insurance," he declared. Employes, he said, are demanding the same take-home pay they would get without the insurance deductions. Employers are adding both the increase in take-home pay and the employers' contributions to the insurance fund to the price of their goods that the public has to pay.

He added that the contributions made bear "only a remote relationship to what a man gets. Some pay more and get less, and some pay less and get more."

Taft suggested to Altmeyer "just for an argument" that the Government junk its present system. In its place, he suggested that the Government pay a flat $25 a month to everyone over 65 years old, without requiring any matching formula with the states.

He heatedly differed with Altmeyer when the latter declared the insurance program was "spreading the risk." He repeated that "wages today are based on take-home pay, and the tax on either the employe or employer is passed on to the body politic."

Altmeyer Disagrees

Altmeyer disagreed, declaring, "You can't say all costs are passed on." The amount passed on, he added, is "based on the type of product." In some cases, he said, it is entirely absorbed by the employe and employer. He declared Taft's arguments presented sound reasons for extending the coverage to include virtually all workers in the insurance system.

The argument ended when the committee adjourned because of an important Senate session, with Taft declaring: "I am saying the people working today are paying taxes to pay people who worked years ago. Payments are now being made out of money coming into the Treasury from the current payroll tax."

Taft also criticized operation of the public assistance system in various States. In Ohio, he said, 190 out of each 1000 persons over 65 years old are on the public assistance rolls. In New Jersey only 65 in each 1000 are drawing public assistance, and in Louisiana the number jumps to 819.

In some states it is a policy to run up the total in smaller payments, he said, because the Federal Government pays a greater proportion of the smaller payments. Social Security pays $15 of the first $20 in each public assistance case, plus 50 per cent of the remainder, which is determined by the State. The State pays the rest. Under Altmeyer's new proposal Social Security would pay $20 of the first $25 in each monthly payment.

House Group Votes to Levy Insurance Tax

The House Ways and Means Committee voted to impose a ninety-million-dollar corporation tax on the 1947, 1948 and 1949 investment income of life insurance companies.

These companies have paid no corporate tax on about $4,500,000,000 of such income over the last three years.

Representative Lynch (D., N.Y.), who headed a subcommittee that drew up the new legislation, said this is due to an "unrealistic" formula adopted by Congress in 1943 for taxation of life insurance companies.

The old formula gave these companies credits of deductions on certain portions of their net investment income—from such things as real estate—in consideration of the companies' future obligations to policyholders. The way the formula has worked out, the companies have had to pay no tax on such income since 1946.

The new bill would levy the corporation tax on 5 to 6 percent of the companies' net earnings for the last three years.

Truck Knocks Down Arlington Farms Walkover . . .

Scene on Jefferson Davis Highway after trailer truck hauling two oil tanks knocked the pedestrian overpass down

The driver of a truck which sheared off half the pedestrian overpass at Arlington Farms was seriously injured yesterday when falling steel beams pinned him in his truck cab.

Spencer Burris, 38, of Albemarle, N. C., was rescued after more than 10 minutes in the cab, crushed down to below the level of the engine hood. He was taken to Arlington Hospital for treatment of a broken back, lacerations of the right arm, head and hand.

His companion, a brother-in-law, Edward Hatley, 22, also of Albemarle, was treated for lacerations of the left hand and scalp and discharged.

The accident occurred about 1:30 p. m. yesterday on the Jefferson Davis Highway, which passes in front of Arlington Farms and leads up to the Pentagon and Shirley Highway.

Burris, driving a tractor-trailer truck carrying two huge empty oil tanks, failed to clear the steel and wood overpass by 9¾ inches, Capt. E. F. O'Hare of the Farms police said. The impact sheared off two 30-inch steel I beams, hurling one into the top of the truck cab. The clearance is 14 feet and is indicated on signs on the structure.

An employe of the ABCD Wrecking Corp. of Arlington, who was driving by, saw the situation and rushed over to the firm for a heavy crane. This enabled rescue workers to raise the steel beam and free Burris, who was rushed to Arlington Hospital by the Arlington County Rescue Squad. Another crane from the Army Engineers Corps helped clear the wreckage.

The pedestrian overpass is used daily by many of the 1900 girls living in Arlington Farms, 412 families of Army officers residing there and the 1000 officers and civilians working in the nearby Navy Department Bureau of Yards and Docks. Two bus lines make stops at the overpass.

C. B. Mulvehill, manager of the Virginia District for the Public Buildings Service, GSA, said the remaining half of the overpass will probably be removed today and plans made for replacing it with a steel structure. He said the overpass was six years old.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 18 (U.P.).—Raymond Welsh, 16, was sentenced to life imprisonment today for the fatal shooting of his buddy, Fred Januskiewicz, 15, on a hunting trip last March 3.

Evidence at the trial brought out that Welsh shot his companion for money the younger boy was carrying.

U. S. Wants Spaak To Supervise OEEC

1947-48 Deal

U. S. Seeking 42 Ships Sold To Chinese

The United States acted yesterday to get back 42 merchant ships it sold to China in 1947-48. It doesn't want them falling into Communist hands.

This country still holds mortgages on the ships. So the State Department announced it has instructed American representatives to ask local authorities in Far East ports to prevent the sailing of any of the ships, which may be there.

Six of the vessels were reported among 13 Chinese ships whose crews hoisted the Red flag at Hongkong on Monday. Two are at Norfolk, Va., and two are understood to be at Baltimore.

The Maritime Commission and Export-Import Bank hold mortgages on the ships which are in arrears about 19 million dollars.

The Chinese Embassy issued a statement last night saying that $1,525,898 had been paid to the Maritime Commission from August to October, 1949. "There remains to date less than $500,000 owing to the Maritime Commission and the Export-Import Bank," the statement said.

Secretary Acheson notified Chinese Ambassador Wellington Koo of the action in a letter. He indicated that the United States is willing to make arrangements with the Nationalists to let the ships continue to be used for trade with Formosa.

Paul Henry Spaak, former Belgian Premier, disclosed yesterday that President Truman urged him to become executive head of the European Marshall Plan organization.

Spaak revealed the request to newsmen after a 15-minute meeting with Mr. Truman. Asked whether he would accept the job, he replied that could not say yes or no until he received the offer formally.

This reflected the fact it is not Mr. Truman's job to offer. It is rather something for the European nations, in their Organization for European Economic Cooperation, to offer.

Wants Job Created for Spaak

However, the United States Administration wishes the OEEC to create the job and offer it to Spaak. For many months this has been a priority goal of W. Averell Harriman, head of the U. S. Marshall Plan operations in Europe.

He has felt that the OEEC cannot assume the powerful economic leading and governing role that he feels is essential unless it is run by a man of Spaak's stature.

A major reason for Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman's forthcoming trip to Paris next week is to urge the same point. Not all the Marshall Plan nations favor it, however. Principal opponents are the United Kingdom and the Scandinavian countries.

Fear Spaak Too Fervent

All advocates of tight internal controls, they suspect Spaak as too fervent an exponent of the principles of free, unrestrained, economic policy.

Further, some of the principal debtor countries in European trade distrust Spaak as a representative of the free-trading, prosperous coterie of "Belgian bankers."

Before his party lost office in last year's Belgian elections, Spaak served, in the role of Belgian Prime Minister, as chairman of the Council of the OEEC. But this was only a part-time, two-or-three-days-a-quarter job.

As director general of the OEEC, if the office were created, Spaak would exercise far more independent governing authority.

Pole Resigns U. N. Post, Asks Asylum

DR. ALEKSANDER RUDZINSKI
Pole asks asylum

Lake Success, Jan. 18 (NYHT).—The legal counsellor of the Polish delegation to the United Nations denounced his Communist homeland today, resigned his position and appealed to Secretary of State Dean Acheson for asylum in the United States for himself and his wife.

Aleksander W. Rudzinski, 49, asserted in his letter to Acheson that "freedom has disappeared in Poland" and that it had become "entirely hopeless" to attempt to make the Polish delegation in the United Nations free from dictation by the Soviet delegation.

Rudzinski, it was learned, had pondered resignation for about a year. His decision came to a head Monday when he was ordered by his government to walk out of a United Nations meeting along with the Russian delegates because the other countries rejected a Russian demand for immediate expulsion of Nationalist China.

Rudzinski obeyed orders for that day, but in his letter to Acheson he asserted, "I cannot associate myself with walkouts calculated to paralyze and disrupt the United Nations."

He also resigned positions as Polish vice-consul in New York, and chief of the legal department of the Polish Consulate-General in New York.

Two Czech Officials In U. S. Resign Posts

New York, Jan. 18 (NYHT).—Two officials of the Czechoslovak Consulate General announced today they had resigned in protest against their country's Communist-dominated government and asked asylum in the United States.

One of them said the action left him jobless with no immediate prospects and a wife and child to feed.

He is Arnost Fried, secretary at the Consulate, who had previously worked for the Czechoslovak foreign service for 30 years in France, England, Austria, Romania and Spain.

Vladislav Matejcek, deputy acting consul, who also announced his resignation, said he had friends and relatives in the United States who had offered him two job prospects. He is unmarried.

Post reporter Agnes Meyer turns her attention to Prince Georges County in a new series starting this Sunday in The Washington Post.

2000 Hainan Invasion Craft Reported Sunk

Taipei, Formosa, Jan. 18 (AP).—The Chinese Nationalists air force and navy have wrecked a Red Jurk fleet, making invasion of Hainan "impossible," the commander of that south China island asserted today.

Gen. Hsueh Yueh, in a report to the government on Formosa, declared the two services had sunk more than 2000 invasion craft.

The craft, mostly junks, were massed around Luichow peninsula opposite Hainan. They have been subjected to weeks of aerial pounding. Occasionally, the navy has jumped in with forays along Luichow's coast.

(The Nationalists in Hongkong reported January 7 the air force had turned back an invasion fleet of 1000 junks, sinking half of them.)

The air force announced fighter planes had attacked Shanghai for the second straight day. Nanking also was raided. Canton was hit Tuesday.

The air force claimed the Lunghwa air port of Shanghai was damaged further and a plane on the field wrecked. A train between Shanghai and Nanking was shot up.

Medium bombers were said to have sunk about 50 craft being assembled by the Communists for an invasion of Chushan, the air and navy base 100 miles south of Shanghai.

Adenauer Gets U. S. Rebuff

they must not take positions based on the idea that they have no responsibility for the war, or that no consequences flow from the war. A great many consequences do flow from the war, he said, implying that one of them was the loss of the Saar territory.

The French have heard many such words of caution from the United States and Britain, but it has been at least three months since any high ranking State Department official has reminded the Germans that they started the war and must bear the consequences.

Acheson recalled that under three Secretaries of State the United States has agreed to have the Sarr detached from Germany. The American position has been that the area should be "integrated" economically and financially with France, but that its future political status must await the eventual peace treaty with Germany.

Even on this issue, Acheson went on to say, the United States would again support France in giving the Saar a certain degree of political independence from Germany. In line with this attitude, he said, the United States approved various French actions, such as administering the Saar by a French commissioner, and bringing it into the French customs areas.

As for the proposed leasing of the mines to France, Acheson said this would not prejudice the decisions of the final peace settlement.

Helsinki, Finland, Jan. 18 (AP).—President Juho Paasikivi, under fire from Moscow and Finnish Communists, has won reelection easily in voting for presidential electors, the count showed today.

But marked gains by the Communist-led Popular Democrats and the right-wing Conservative and Progressive parties apparently doomed the Social Democratic government of Premier Karl A. Fagerholm.

The voting was held Monday and Tuesday.

With final revisions expected to change the results only slightly, the 79-year-old Paasikivi could count 172 electoral votes in his column, against 128 for the two opposing candidates.

The popular vote for Conservatives, Progressives, Swedish Party and Social Democrats, all expected to support Paasikivi when the 300 electors meet February 15, was 868,693, against a combined opposition of 608,314.

Mauno Pekkala, candidate of the Popular Democrats, was second with 316,999 votes, and the Agrarian, Dr. Urho Kekkonen, was last with 291,315.

Pekkala gets 65 electoral votes and Kekkonen 63.

The figures for each party were: (Percent of vote in 1948 parliamentary election in backets.)

Party	Votes	Percent
Agrarians	291,315	19.7	(27)
Social Dem.	328,761	22.3	(27)
Popular Dem.	316,999	21.5	(19)
Conservatives	194,908	13.2	(16.5)
Swedish Party	135,677	9.2	(7)
Progressives	68,804	4.7	(2.5)
Cons.-Prog. Cartel	140,543	9.4

The Conservative - Progressive cartel was a union of Conservatives and Progressives in some districts. The two parties thus had a combined percentage of 27.3 against 19 percent in 1948.

Senators Seek Wallace 1944 China Report

By The Associated Press

The White House disclaimed knowledge yesterday of a 1944 document in which Henry A. Wallace criticized Chiang Kai-shek and questioned whether he could run postwar China.

Senators were searching for the original. A copy of the report, with some omissions, was made public by Senator O'Conor (D., Md.), who told newsmen Wallace sent it to him early in December.

The report said in part:

"Chiang, at best, is a short-term investment. It is not believed that he has the intelligence or the political strength to run postwar China. The leaders of postwar China will be brought forward by evolution or revolution, and it now appears more likely the latter."

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) has described the document as a secret report which Wallace wrote after a visit to China in the summer of 1944—a year before the close of World War II. Wallace was then Vice President.

Kremlin Asked To Help Speed Austria Talks

Moscow, Jan. 18 (AP).—The American, British and French Ambassadors made a joint statement to the Soviet government tonight on the deadlocked Austrian independence treaty talks.

American Ambassador Alan G. Kirk, British Ambassador Sir David Kelly and French Ambassador Yvres Chataigneau went to the Russian Foreign Ministry and stayed an hour.

They discussed the problem with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky was unable to receive them because of illness, they reported.

After the meeting the Ambassadors went to the private office of the British Ambassador, where they talked over their conversation with Gromyko.

The three men had been conferring frequently within the last two days prior to tonight's visit to the Foreign Ministry.

After three years of work, deputy foreign ministers of the four nations still have been unable to agree on an Austrian treaty. Russia and the Western powers have blamed each other for the failure.

Differences on China Are Cited As Requiring Atlantic Union

NYHT News Service.

Divergent American and British policies toward Communist China point up the need for unified action under the Atlantic Union plan, former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts, president of the Atlantic Union Committee, said yesterday.

At a news conference to submit an "interim report" on the Atlantic Union movement, Roberts called the Chinese situation a "boon to Russia," pointing up differences between the "water-tight compartments" of nationalistic interests even more than had the Palestine situation. He declared that "we are losing the cold war every day" because of such differences, and that democracies can lose their freedoms in this fashion without a shooting war.

"The first step toward unifying foreign policies of the democracies, thus strengthening the United Nations and helping to avert the threat of a hydrogen bomb war," is passage of the resolution, Roberts said. He noted that great progress has been made since six months ago, when only 5 Representatives and 20 Senators supported the move.

Senators Estes Kefauver, Democrat, of Tennessee, and Robert C. Hendrickson, Republican, of New Jersey, and Representative Hale Boggs, Democrat, of Louisiana, representing the original sponsors of the resolution, joined Roberts in the news conference. Members of the committee from 15 States are here to urge prompt action. They will call on President Truman at the White House Friday to restate their objectives.

UAW Strike Notice Given to Chrysler

Detroit, Jan. 18 (AP).—The CIO United Auto Workers, rejecting Chrysler's $100-a-month pension offer, handed the corporation a 7-day strike order notice today.

The ultimatum was handed the company at the start of regularly scheduled negotiations today.

Norman Matthews, UAW Chrysler director, said the union considered Chrysler's pension offer, made late yesterday, "unsound and inadequate."

Total benefits in the offer amount to only about 5 cents per hour, Matthews said. In a recent pension agreement between the UAW and Ford Motor Co. union gains were estimated at 10 cents an hour.

The company's offer to grant a pension plan allowing workers to retire on $100 a month, including Federal Social Security benefits, was the first it has offered. The UAW represents 89,000 hourly-rated Chrysler workers.

One Chrysler-UAW issue was over financing of the plan.

Robert W. Conder, Chrysler labor relations director, said the company was basing its offer on its "promise to pay." He added:

"We believe the solvency of Chrysler Corp. is good."

But Matthews said UAW negotiators objected because the company:

1. Wanted the new contract to run five years with reopening on the wage issue only once a year.

2. Failed to commit itself to a "fixed contribution in cents per hour into a trust fund to guarantee pensions on an actuarially sound basis."

3. Made no provisions for union participation in administration of the pensions.

4. Offered only a "sham" proposal on insurance and medical-hospital care.

In Policy Split

Luckman Resigns From Lever Bros.

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—Charles Luckman, the "wonder boy" of American business, resigned today as president of Lever Brothers Co. because of a policy disagreement with the British and Dutch parent companies.

Luckman

Luckman, already a prominent figure in industry, became president of the giant soap, toilet article and food manufacturing concern in 1946 at the age of 37.

The announcement of his resignation was made jointly by Sir Geoffrey Heyworth, chairman of Lever Brothers & Unilever Ltd., the British parent firm, and Paul Rykens, chairman of the Dutch parent, Lever Brothers & Unilever N. V. Both now are in New York.

Their statement said Luckman resigned as the result of "a disagreement as to the future policy of the American company that we were unable to resolve."

Luckman's resignation came at the end of one of the largest industrial moves of recent years—the shift of the Lever executive headquarters from Cambridge, Mass., to New York.

The Heyworth-Rykens statement said no arrangements had been made for filling the presidential post.

Luckman was president of the Pepsodent Co. of Chicago at the age of 35 when Lever Brothers acquired the concern in 1944. Eighteen months later he became executive vice president of Lever Brothers and on July 1, 1946, became president.

A statement issued today in Luckman's behalf said that during his tenure Lever Brothers almost doubled the volume of its soap and food business.

In 1947 President Truman named Luckman chairman of the Citizens Food Committee, which spearheaded a Nation-wide campaign to conserve meat and grain for the hungry of Europe.

[Luckman also acted as a member of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights and at present is a member of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity for the Armed Forces.]

Langer Asks Investigation Of Luckman and Firm

Two congressional investigations of Lever Brothers Co. and Charles Luckman, its resigning president, were asked yesterday by Senator William M. Langer (R., N. D.).

During Senate debate on the oleo tax repealer, he announced he had introduced a resolution to authorize an inquiry by the Judiciary Committee into effects of the firm's activities on oleo prices. He accused Luckman and the company of trying to corner the oleo market.

Langer also called on the Senate to investigate how much Luckman and Lever Brothers may have contributed to the Democratic Party, in connection with Luckman's appointment as general manager of the Jackson-Jefferson Day Dinner.

New Outbreak Of Fire Feared In Colorado

Colorado Springs, Colo., Jan. 18 (AP).—Weary, red-eyed men kept watch tonight over the last hot spots of a multi-million-dollar fire that whiplashed 50 square miles south of here, leaving two Camp Carson soldiers dead, three missing and 10 critically injured.

Others were keeping a check on a 400-acre fire in the Black Forest northeast of here and on a series of small brush fires which broke out during the day along United States 85 to the north.

Rangers throughout Colorado were alerted by the United States Forest Service for critical fire dangers. The Weather Bureau offered no hope of immediate relief. It said no precipitation is expected before next week. It termed conditions over most of the State "terrifically dry" and called the eastern plains "a tinder box."

And, after 12 hours of relative calm, more of the wind which has lashed the Colorado Springs-Pueblo area was forecast for tonight and Thursday with gusts over 65 miles an hour.

Police Follow 'Hot' Leads in Million-Dollar Robbery

Boston, Jan. 18 (AP).—Police received a report tonight that five peajackets—the type of garb worn by gunmen who looted Brink's armored car service of a million dollars—were found on a wharf in Dorchester.

Police squads raced to the Dorchester wharf but for the moment there was no further information. If it proved a valid clew, it could mean the gunmen—or part of them—by now could be well at sea.

Only a few hours earlier a mask similar to those worn by the gunmen was found in an unidentified spot 35 miles north of Boston.

A Nation-wide manhunt was pressed for the commando robbers who made off with the biggest cash grab in the history of American crime.

The seven gunmen wore plastic rubber full-face Halloween masks—which are pulled over the head—in the holdup at the money transportation firm's offices near the waterfront at 7:10 last night.

Rewards which could total $150,000 were posted.

The company offered a $100,000 reward for the bandits "dead or imprisoned."

The other possible $50,000 was offered by the National Surety Corp., with whom Brink's was insured. The corporation announced it would pay 5 percent of all cash recovered.

Some half-million dollars in checks also were grabbed by the gunmen, but a surety company spokesman said the reward offer is limited to cash recovered.

They got away with all they could carry—a million dollars in cash and half a million in checks. They left behind a million dollars. Why? Either they couldn't carry it in their already overstuffed laundry bags, or, they were scared by the door-buzzing of a guard reporting for work.

The robbers worked silently with only low-voiced mutterings. The whole thing took 20 minutes. Then, fast and sure-moving, they vanished.

Hottest clew was the New York City police report that a car believed to be one of two getaway sedans was spotted in an expensive upper Manhattan filling station.

The man at the station, John Koziatek, told police he serviced a car with the hunted Massachusetts plates. There were three men in the car.

Koziatek said he saw on the back seat of the car "full-faced masks—black masks—like Halloween masks."

Eight suspects—one a notorious Boston holdup man—were lined up at police headquarters here today but about all the police got were some snarling answers. The men were released.

The police superintendent aimed this criticism at Brink's—"There was little or no security there. To my knowledge, Brink's has never asked for police protection."

Russell's Career

Russell, a former butcher boy from Boston, lost both forearms in an explosion while training with a parachute unit near Pinehurst, N. C., on June 6, 1944—D-Day.

Since winning two Oscars for his performance in the movie, "The Best Years of Our Lives," he has dedicated himself to preaching tolerance, and showing veterans from coast to coast how even the most severely handicapped physically can be rehabilitated. Since becoming commander in September he has travelled more than 35,000 miles with his message.

Representative Ford, a 196-pound 6-footer, spearheaded the youthful Republican Home Front which broke the Old Guard Republican control of his home State, Michigan. A lawyer and Navy veteran with seven battle stars, he was center on the undefeated Michigan football team of 1932 and 1933, and in 1934 was voted most valuable player.

Chemist, Inventor

Pitzer, on leave from his post as professor of chemistry at the University of California at Berkeley, is the youngest chemist member of the National Academy of Sciences. On the California University faculty since 23, he was named assistant dean of the College of Letters and Science in 1947. His work on the thermodynamics of hydrocarbons has helped improve the yield and quality of gasoline and other products.

Hastings, president of the Hastings Instrument Co., invented radyst, a radio navigation and tracking method said to be 100 times more accurate and sensitive than radar.

Lincoln Says He Won't Run Against Taft

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 18 (U.P.)—Murray D. Lincoln, boomed as a possible Farm-Labor candidate for the Democratic nomination to oppose Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), announced today that he would not seek that office.

Lincoln announced at the same time that he was bolting the Republican Party. The announcement of the head of the Farm Bureau Insurance Cos. said he would register as a Democrat for the May 2 primary.

"I see no possibility of the present Republican leadership solving the serious, major problems of our times," Lincoln said.

The disclosure that Lincoln is not a candidate was expected to have a favorable reaction on the candidacy of State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson for the Democratic nomination.

Lincoln's decision was foreshadowed by a visit to Ohio recently of National Democratic Chairman William Boyle. Boyle made it clear that the Democratic national leaders would not intercede in the Ohio primary.

Lincoln said, "A decision has been reached. I am not a candidate, in the 1950 elections, for the office of Senator from this State."

The forerunners in the contest for the Democratic nomination to oppose Taft are now the State auditor and Toledo Mayor Michael V. Disalle. A number of other less known candidates are in the race.

Lewis Admits To Telephones

nection with the Bladensburg bungalow.

Mrs. Stanton testified she and her daughter controlled two of the telephones. She denied knowledge of a third telephone.

In his opening statement to the jury of seven men and five women trying Lewis, Hitz claimed that Lewis headed a lottery syndicate, which Acalotti and Billeci served as "tentacles."

Control of the telephones was actually stipulated one week ago during a preliminary hearing on wire tapping, although the facts were presented to the jury for the first time yesterday.

On January 11, Judge Alexander Holtzoff told Collins he would not listen to any claim that Lewis' rights were violated by deputy marshals who answered the telephones during the raid, unless Lewis admitted control of the telephones.

Collins objected to such an admission, but finally agreed to so stipulate. Judge Holtzoff then ruled against Collins and cleared the Government of wire tapping charges.

Geraci Chief Witness

Chief witness for the prosecution in the eighth day of the trial yesterday was Deputy Marshal Edward J. Geraci.

Geraci testified that he was one of the marshals who raided the premises at 4310 46th st., Bladensburg, in one of a series of eight simultaneous gambling raids on March 25, under the direction of United States Attorney George Morris Fay.

Geraci identified from the witness stand a race results "ticker," adding machines, "quantities of numbers slips" in brown paper bags, and numerous other slips bearing such notations as "Eddie hit 2398.00."

Geraci testified that marshals also seized two pistols and more than $26,000 in cash.

Under questioning by Hitz, Geraci described the contents of five telephone conversations he said he had with persons who called the Lewis headquarters while the raid was in progress and placed bets on numbers.

"One man said this is Gus Waller and told me he wanted to play certain numbers. He gave them to me and I copied them down," he said.

ITO Charter Is Approved by Planning Unit

The National Planning Association's committee on international policy yesterday called on the United States to approve the charter of the proposed International Trade Organization.

The NPA, a nonprofit, nonpolitical group, conceded that the charter "has many imperfections and many loopholes." But it said the ITO "is an important stone in the edifice" of liberal trade between free countries.

It said the charter, initialed by 54 nations, was largely the result "of the initiative of the United States." If Congress turns it down, it added, it will "disavow" the Nation's negotiators "and reverse past policy" of lower tariffs and more liberal trade pacts.

The two principal objections to the charter, it said, are that it "has become 'watered down' or meaningless," and that it "confirms in the United States the lower tariff and more liberal trade policies of the last 15 years and it yields to an international body some of the discretion to alter this course . . ."

But these objections should not cause rejection, it said.

Inoculations May Be Urged

is about a 25 to 30 percent chance that the child she bears will be born deaf, blind or with a malformed heart. The normal incidence of such malformations is reported to be about half of 1 percent. After about the sixteenth week of pregnancy, German measles has no effect on the unborn child.

Both potentially explosive questions were yesterday in the hands of the committee on technical knowledge and research of the conference, officially called the National Conference on Cardiovascular Diseases. The three-day meeting opened here yesterday at the Hotel Mayflower after months of preconference study. Two hundred are attending.

Dr. T. Duckett Jones, of Boston, the committee cochairman, barely touched on the matter however in his talk before the opening general session, to which the press had been invited.

"On congenital heart disease," Dr. Jones declared, "We now have the knowledge concerning the prevention of congenital heart defects. That knowledge needs to be applied."

The heart authority admitted later that the "knowledge" concerns the known high incidence of malformed hearts (and other body defects) in children born of pregnancies affected by German measles. Nutrition factors are also involved, but less frequently, he said.

Dr. Jones, who has written some of the Nation's leading medical textbooks on the human heart, declined to discuss his committee's recommendations.

Concerning inoculation with the live virus of German measles as immunizing insurance against the disease in pregnancy, Dr. Jones said the "suggestion" has been made many times in medical reports. But no authoritative group, he admitted, has ever publicly recommended the direct action.

One conference member said many doctors have recommended and performed medical abortions as standard practice for women who get German measles in the first trimester (third) of pregnancy. The virus disease, except in pregnancy, causes but little discomfort and no apparent harm.

Final action on the recommendations is expected to be made public Friday at conclusion of the three-day conference.

Summing-Up Arguments in Hiss Trial Start Today

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—The evidence was all in today in the perjury trial of former State Department official Alger Hiss.

Summing-up arguments begin Thursday, and are expected to wind up in time for the case to go to the jury late Friday.

The trial was in adjournment today as Government and defense attorneys readied their final speeches to the jury of eight women and four men.

It will be the second time that the fate of Hiss will be weighed against the accusations of former Communist spy courier Whittaker Chambers.

Chambers, the chief Government witness, claims Hiss gave him United States secrets for delivery to prewar Russian agents. Hiss was indicted for perjury when he denied this to a Federal grand jury.

Reserve Program For More Men at Less Future Cost

The Army announced yesterday that it is planning a new reserve corps program designed to turn out more trained fighting men—at less future cost to the government.

Secretary of the Army Gray said the new program aims at a "desirable" organized reserve of 625,000, but the Army will accept 367,000 officers and men as the "minimum total."

It will replace a program begun in 1945 that called for one million organized reserves, but had produced only 250,000 up to last November 30, Gray said.

The Army Secretary said that the new plan will cost about 153 million dollars annually compared to the 369 million dollars estimated for the ultimate organization planne at the end of the war.

sign. He was 76 yesterday, and had hoped to resign long ago.

In his letter of resignation Taylor, an Episcopalian, gave an accounting of his 10-year mission. As if to answer the Protestant critics in advance, he recalled that he had gone originally because of President Roosevelt's desire for a constant exchange of views with all great church groups.

In similar fashion, Taylor wrote, the late President invited officials of the Federal Council of Churches and the Jewish Theological Seminary to confer with him in Washington from time to time.

He said his mission in Rome had helped pave the way psychologically for the Allied invasion of Europe, sometimes serving as the only link with the Italians. After the war, his letter went on, the mission turned its attention to war relief and to the ideological conflict with communism.

"It was realized that every resource, spiritual and material, was necessary to bring to the troubled world the progress and enduring peace for which most of mankind was striving," Taylor wrote. "It was in this light that you requested me to continue my mission."

Taylor said his six postwar trips to Rome "were concerned primarily with the continuing problems of attaining a peaceful and advancing world in accordance with Christian principles, and with the new problems of sustaining the hopes of the enslaved victims of Communist tyranny."

He said it was a matter of "particular regret" that he felt compelled to return to private life "when the great objectives sought by you and your predecessor are not yet fully attained."

The President replied with glowing praise of Taylor's "selfless devotion, dependability and unbounded loyalty to every precious value the people of our country hold dear."

"Most reluctantly" accepting the resignation, the President said Taylor's work in Rome had made "a fundamental contribution to the unity of moral conviction that today sustains the world's peoples in their unflagging efforts for international peace with freedom and justice and genuine opportunity for progress."

Taylor said he planned to devote his remaining years to strengthening cooperation "among all moral forces working for a better world."

Chapman Is Confirmed As Interior Secretary

The Senate last night confirmed the nomination of Oscar L. Chapman of Denver, Colo., as Secretary of the Interior.

The former undersecretary succeeded Julius Krug, who resigned December 1.

Before his confirmation, Senators Taylor (D., Ida.), Magnuson (D., Wash.), Lehman (D., N. Y.), Green (D., R. I.), O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), Kilgore (D., W. Va.), Langer (R., N. D.) and Fulbright (D., Ark.) paid brief tributes to Chapman.

Gen. Arnold Burial Today

Force commander, who died unexpectedly Sunday morning at his Sonoma, Calif., ranch home, was brought here by a C-54 transport which landed at National Airport at 10 a. m. Two hours earlier, President Truman's airplane, the Independence, landed with Mrs. Arnold, her sons, Lieut. Col. Henry H. Arnold, jr., Capt. William Bruce Arnold, and Lieut. David Lee Arnold; her son-in-law, Comdr. Ernest Snowden; Lieut. Col. H. M. Chesley, General Arnold's former aide, and M/Sergt. Bruce Simmons, his wartime orderly.

The airplane bearing General Arnold's body was met at the airport by a delegation of officials from the Defense Department, who escorted it to Washington Cathedral. These officials included Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson; Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff; Undersecretary of Defense Stephen T. Early; Undersecretary of the Army Tracy S. Voorhees; Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Wade Haislip; Undersecretary of the Navy Dan Kimball; Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations; Secretary of the Air Force W. Stuart Symington; Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, and representatives of the Secretaries of State and Treasury.

Today the body will lie in state from 8 a. m. until 1 p. m. when it will leave the Cathedral for funeral services at the amphitheater in Arlington Cemetery. The bronze casket will be transferred from a hearse to the traditional caisson on 15th st. nw., between Constitution ave. and E st., and the procession will move west on Constitution ave about 1:45 p. m. In the procession will be troop units representing all branches of the service and many friends and representatives of official Washington.

Truman to Attend Rites

At Twenty-third st. the procession will turn south to Lincoln Memorial and thence across Memorial Bridge to the heights of Arlington. Services at the amphitheater, in the presence of President Truman and representatives of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the Government and of the diplomatic corps, will be conducted by Maj. Gen. Charles I. Carpenter, chief of Air Force chaplains.

During the procession a flight of F-84 jet fighters will pass overhead, one of the five files traditionally empty in memory of a departed airman. This flight will be followed by a formation of 80 F-84's and by some 30 B-29 bombers, the heavy bomber of World War II whose devastating forays against Japan General Arnold directed from Washington.

One squadron of fighters will dip low over the grave in a last salute during ceremonies which will include the customary salute of three rounds followed by taps. General Arnold will be buried in Section 34 of the cemetery, close to the grave of General of the Armies John J. Pershing.

Active pallbearers, detailed from all the armed services, will be:

Air Force, Pfc. T. W. Spearling; Pfc. M. W. Taylor; Army, 1st Sergt. Clay P. Patrick, Sergt. Elmer B. Brandenberg; Navy, Chief Petty Officer S. L. Pickett, QM/3 E. K. Rae; Marines, M/Sergt. Henry G. Roberts; Coast Guard, RM/2 James A. Riffle.

More than 100 friends and associates of General Arnold have been invited to serve as honorary pallbearers.

Harris Is Named To Be Assistant Solicitor General

Abraham J. Harris of Chicago was nominated by President Truman yesterday to be assistant solicitor general in the Justice Department.

He would succeed George T. Washington, who resigned to accept appointment as a judge on the United States Court of Appeals in Washington. Harris had been Washington's assistant.

Harris, 41, is a native of St. Paul, Minn., and a graduate of the University of Minnesota and Harvard University. He practiced law in Chicago for a number of years before coming to Washington in 1938 as an attorney for the National Labor Relations Board. He has been with the Justice Department the last five years.

Finn May Lose Money On Novel's U. S. Success

Helsinki, Finland, Jan. 18 (U.P.).—Mika Waltari, Finnish author of the best-seller, "The Egyptian," may have to pay out 500,000 Finnish marks ($2200) for the success of his book in the United States.

Waltari estimated he would earn four million marks ($17,500) on the sale of his book in America. But taxes there and in Finland will take 4,500,000 marks.

Waltari asked the Finnish government to seek an agreement with the United States to avoid this double taxation.

McCloy Coming Home For Talks on Germany

U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy is returning from Germany January 23 for consultations, the State Department announced yesterday.

McCloy will talk over German problems with Secretary Acheson and other officials and make a routine report to President Truman, an announcement said.

He is expected to be in the Capital about a week before returning to Germany.

Ruling on Plea By Gubitchev Is Due Friday

New York, Jan. 18 (U.P.).—The pretrial hearing to determine whether Judith Coplon and Valentin Gubitchev must stand trial for espionage ended today after the Government girl's attorney charged she had been "framed" to appease the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Judge Sylvester J. Ryan said he would rule Friday on defense claims that the case should be thrown out because the Government obtained its evidence through illegal wiretapping. If the judge rejects that appeal, the trial is expected to begin Tuesday.

Archibald Palmer, the attorney for Miss Coplon, challenged the Government to present evidence obtained in other ways than wiretapping to a new grand jury and see if it could get an indictment. He charged that the Government prosecuted the 25-year-old Justice Department employe and the Russian-born former employe of the United Nations to "get off the hook" with the House Committee.

Army Gets Set to Open Levee On Mississippi to Ease Strain

By The Associated Press

The Army Wednesday rolled in the heavy equipment it may use to smash a safety-valve levee to relieve pressure along vital areas of the swollen Mississippi River.

New rains and rising rivers upstream heightened the chance that engineers may have to flood 2000 square miles of fertile southeastern Missouri farmland, wrecking hundreds of land owners financially.

Already 8000 residents of the Birds Point-New Madrid floodway have fled from their homes with furniture and all other possessions they could haul away. Some lashed their homes to their foundations with ropes. The remaining 4000 floodway residents are staying—until or unless the Army issues an evacuation order.

The Mississippi, Ohio and Wabash rivers were rising at crucial points. Hundreds more persons were evacuated, new volunteers were called to bolster the Wabash River levee at Vincennes, Ind., and two men perished in southern Illinois floodwaters.

Storms that lashed California for two weeks with rain or snow brought floods to its northern coastal counties. The Smith River, near the Oregon line, rose swiftly. The Eel, rising a foot an hour, was expected to spill over its banks.

Montgomery Maps Action On Bond Law

The Montgomery Council has asked the county delegation to the General Assembly to sponsor amendments to the state code to clarify procedure for handling bond issues.

The delegation will hold a hearing on the proposed amendments, recommended at a joint executive session Tuesday, on January 30 at 8 p. m. in the Rockville Court House.

Under the charter a referendum may be called on any bond issue if 10 percent of the registered voters sign a petition before August 15 of the year in which the issue is authorized.

However, the county's bond counsel interprets a portion of the Express Powers Act, the charter enabling act, as requiring a mandatory referendum on any bond issue, petition or none.

It is this mandatory provision which the council seeks to have removed, since the council estimates referendums cost $15,000 each.

Issuance of a total of $1,220,000 in bonds voted by the council in last May's legislative session is being held up pending clarification of the law.

Evidence Held Improper in Couple Slaying

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 18 (AP).—With a broadside of questions from the bench, the Court of Appeals today sought to determine whether Thomas A. Edwards was offered "inducements" to confess.

Five of the six black-robed judges joined in the barrage at a hearing on Edwards' appeal from a death sentence for the Mahlan-Kline murders.

The line of questioning indicated that if there were any improper inducements, Edwards' conviction by a three-judge Baltimore court could possibly be reversed.

Defense Attorney William J. McWilliams asked this action on the ground that Edwards' confession was improperly admitted as evidence.

After 2½ hours of oral arguments, the hearing was recessed until Thursday (10 a. m.)

Edwards, 23-year-old gardener from Marley Neck, was convicted of shooting John H. Mahlan, 25, Glen Burnie postal clerk, and his date, Mary C. Kline, 18, on the night of a full moon, September 17, 1948.

The State said he murdered the couple in a fit of anger because Mahlan's car nearly ran him down.

County Seizes 5-Man Gang In Theft Cases

Montgomery County police yesterday disclosed the arrest of five men who they believe were a gang responsible for numerous housebreakings in the western part of the county during the last month.

The men, arrested Tuesday after nearly two weeks of investigation, have definitely been connected with five cases, police said.

Loot from the reported cases totaled more than $2000, according to police. It included a quantity of whisky from the County Dispensary on MacArthur blvd., beer from a Glen Echo tavern, turkeys from a Potomac poultry farm and tools and equipment from private homes. All the places parallel the Potomac River.

Arrested were John E. Coffin, 23, charged with four cases of housebreaking and larceny; Robert L. Caldwell, 20, charged in three cases; William N. Ellis, 37, two cases, and Vernon P. Kitchen, 47, one charge of receiving stolen property, all of Route 3, Bethesda, and Robert L. Voight, 19, of 201 Wellesley ave., Glen Echo, charged with theft.

Coffin, Caldwell and Ellis are being held in the Rockville jail in lieu of $3000 bond apiece. Kitchen and Voight were released under $1000 and $250 bond, respectively. All are scheduled for hearing Monday at Bethesda Police Court.

Riggs Net Up 15% in Year To New Peak

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net operating earnings of Riggs National Bank in 1949 totaled $1,784,993, an advance of 15 percent over the previous year, President Robert V. Fleming reported yesterday.

Fleming

The net was equal to $35.70 a share, compared with $31.84 a share in 1948. The earnings were the highest in the institution's 113-year history.

In his annual report, Fleming cited the "tremendous activity in construction of new homes, apartment houses and office buildings in the Washington area and cautioned that "if building is continued at the present rate without a corresponding increase in population, overproduction of housing and office units could result."

On the national front, Fleming saw "a much better business sentiment than existed a year ago" and said the outlook is encouraging for a sustained high level of business prosperity for the first six to eight months of 1950.

Other highlights of the Riggs report:

Holdings of Government securities at year end totaled $156,400,100, compared with $155,951,900 at end of 1948.

Capital, surplus, undivided profits and reserves reached a new peak of $17,712,701 and compared with $16,945,465 at the end of 1948.

Deposits of $298,836,734 were more than double the $130,816,450 figure of 1940. Assets of $318,238,400 likewise were nearly 2½ times greater than in 1940.

Loans and discounts aggregated $58,539,275, against $61,251,744 at the end of 1948.

NEW RECORDS: Savings and resources of Columbia Federal Savings & Loan Association reached new highs in 1949, President Clarence E. Kefauver reported yesterday at the annual meeting. Assets rose to $16,170,232 at year-end and savings totaled $13,198,522. Reserves were substantially increased to $1,288,469. One new officer was added—James D. Skinner, who has headed the appraisal department for 10 years, was elevated to assistant secretary.

NEW DIRECTOR: Frank Small, jr., has been elected a director of the National Capital Bank. A Ford dealer in southeast Washington since 1923, Small last week also was elected a director of Washington Petroleum Products, Inc. He is active in civic affairs and has been president of the Clinton Bank in southern Maryland since 1928. All other directors and officers of the National Capital Bank were re-elected at the annual meeting this week.

MEETINGS:—Five local savings loan associations held annual meetings yesterday and reelected officers and directors. All showed substantial progress in assets and other lines. Enterprise Federal reported assets of $5,835,365. Mutual Federal's resources climbed to $2,210,445. Jefferson Federal displayed year-end resources of $8,778,866. Anacostia Federal boosted its balance sheet to $4,485,646. Prudential Building, which moved into a new G st. home last year, grew to $8,723,293.

Denfeld to Ask Retirement; Will Take Job

derstanding of everybody else was that I didn't have to be sworn in again," Admiral Denfeld said. "The commission provided for my continuation in the job I already had. I was already CNO, so I didn't have to be sworn in as CNO."

Asked why some of Secretary Matthews' assistants were advancing the technical argument, Admiral Denfeld laughed.

"Oh," he said, "I guess they're just trying to get him out of a box."

Referring again to the commission. Admiral Denfeld said: "I got it one afternoon. The next morning I went in and thanked Secretary Matthews. He told me: There's nothing I have done since I have been Secretary that has given me more pleasure than getting you reappointed.'"

Admiral Denfeld has until today to make up his mind whether to retire or take another job.

"I'm going to report in at 9 a. m. tomorrow to Rear Admiral Leo H. Thebaud, commandant of the district," he said. "I suppose he'll notify the Navy Department. Then I'm going to put in my request for retirement in a letter to the Secretary. I'm going to ask to retire on March 1.

"I feel I can do more for the Navy on the retired list now than I can do on the active list."

Admiral Denfeld said he intended to get a job and that he had had a number of offers. He said also he would probably write some articles.

satisfied I can straighten it out to the satisfaction of everyone."

He said he was leaving last night for Washington and would be at his office this morning. He said he would deal with the situation then.

In his absence, reporters could get no comment from anyone else in the Navy or from Defense Secretary Louis Johnson's office on the contradiction between Matthews' testimony and Senator McCarthy's charges.

The latter quoted a question put to Matthews by Senators at a hearing on Sherman's nomination and the Secretary's answer. Matthews was asked why a vacancy existed in the office of CNO since Denfeld had been appointed for a second term last August.

McCarthy quoted the record as showing that Matthews replied:

"The vacancy occurs by the fact that Admiral Denfeld's first term has expired and he never has been appointed for a second term."

Senator McCarthy showed his colleagues an official looking document which he said was a copy "of the commission which Matthews told the Armed Services Committee did not exist." He said he'd gotten it indirectly from Admiral Denfeld.

"It is Admiral Denfeld's commission as Chief of Naval Operations," declared the Senator. "It is dated September 14, 1949. It is signed, Mr. President, by Francis P. Matthews and Harry S. Truman."

Parties, in Advance, Shun Blame for Death of FEPC

vote on the rules change caught Republicans by surprise, and was just as plainly designed to put the finger on the GOP. Paradoxically, Truman Democrats supporting FEPC had opposed a quick rules vote until yesterday.

The shift in strategy was attributed (1) to a gimmick in the present rules under which Representative Eugene Cox (D., Ga.) probably would have called up his resolution anyway and (2) to a belief that more Republicans would oppose the rules change if the vote comes before FEPC's Monday inning.

Truman Democrats will start taking the floor today. In a series of one-minute speeches they are expected to argue that only by helping defeat the Cox resolution when it comes up this week can Republicans escape joint blame with the Southerners for killing FEPC.

Actually, much more than the FEPC civil rights bill is at stake. By restoring the power of the familiar Rules Committee coalition, the Cox resolution would again flash the red light on nearly all leftish "Fair Deal" bills.

Practically all of the present maneuvering, however, is centering around the FEPC measure. To turn brighter floodlights on the issue, Rules Chairman Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.) convened a special meeting of the Rules Committee yesterday for the announced purpose of bringing the antidiscrimination measure to a vote.

"I want to see if Republican members of my committee, who have been shouting so loud for civil rights legislation, really are for this measure," said Cox.

When the meeting convened, Representative Allen (R., Ill.) moved an adjournment. He argued the committee had an "agreement" Monday not to meet until Tuesday. Allen protested that Representatives James W. Wadsworth (R., N. Y.) and Howard Smith (D., Va.) had left town to keep other engagements and the committee should not proceed without them.

Representative Brown (R., Ohio) and Christian A. Herter (R., Mass.) similarly objected to proceeding without Wadsworth and Smith.

Sabath Denies Agreement

Two Southern members, Cox and Representative William M. Colmer (D., Miss.) also argued that the special meeting violated a committee "agreement."

Sabath denied there was any "agreement" and three Northern Democrats on the committee—Representative Ray J. Madden (Ill.), John McSweeney (Ill.) and James J. Delaney (N. Y.) sided with him.

Outnumbered again, Sabath announced he would not "force" a vote.

The political blame-pinning started four hours earlier, when Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D., Mass.) announced that the Cox resolution will be considered Friday.

Martin-McCormack Spat

GOP Leader Martin promptly charged the Democratic leadership with endangering the FEPC bill by calling up the rules change before the House has a chance to discharge the Rules group.

Retorted McCormack: "It will be very interesting to the country to see who is going to vote for this rule, particularly on the Republican side. The Republicans have been telling the world they favor antidiscrimination legislation, and now they have an opportunity of demonstrating it to the country."

Last night's $64 question was this: Will Southern Democrats line up with Republicans in favor of postponing action on the rules change or will they go along with the Democratic leadership request for an immediate showdown on their own proposal?

Tapping Receivers

Judge Holtzoff's ruling in connection with charges that police had obtained essential evidence by tapping the telephones of defendants in the local gambling case is embroidered with a great deal of mischievous and wholly irrelevant nonsense. It was his business in the preliminary hearing simply to determine if the Government's case rested on information secured through wire tapping. He decided that it did not. That should have been the end of the matter so far as he was concerned. He took it upon himself, however, to deliver a gratuitous interpretation of the Communications Act and an unsolicited homily on the ethics of wire tapping in general.

It is not a violation of the Communications Act, according to Judge Holtzoff, "if a (telephone) conversation is recorded manually or electrically, at the instance of, or with the acquiescence or consent of, one of the parties." But the act says flatly that "no person, not being authorized by the sender, shall intercept any communication and divulge . . . the contents." The words of a "sender" were both intercepted and divulged in this case; a telephone conversation inescapably involves at least two "senders," and one cannot authorize interception and divulgence in behalf of the other without making a mockery of the law.

Within the year, the Federal Communications Commission held extensive hearings on this very subject. After full consideration, it authorized responsible recordings in business conversations only if a "beep" signal gave continuous warning to the other "sender." What Judge Holtzoff has done is to overrule the FCC on a matter entirely within its competence and in a case where the question was not at issue. The effect of this is to authorize precisely what the FCC has forbidden—the installation of secret recording devices without any warning to the person at the other end of the line.

Beyond this, moreover, Judge Holtzoff undertook to declare that "wire tapping could not have been justified in a case such as this one here. It is only ethical in cases involving the national security or where a human life is involved, such as kidnaping." This is an interesting philosophical observation, but it is quite outside the judge's province. The law says nothing whatever about exceptions in respect of national security or kidnaping. It unequivocally prohibits interception and divulgence of telephone communications by anyone under any circumstances. Congress alone, not Judge Holtzoff, has authority to modify it.

Sense On Subsidies

Promoters of bigger and better shipping subsidies, including many in the Maritime Commission, received a rude shock in the President's budget message. "I am seriously concerned," Mr. Truman said, "by the increasing cost of these existing (operating and construction) subsidies and by the potential cost of new subsidies now being advocated." This is far from an indorsement of the pending Bland bill in the House, which among other things would confer great tax deferment advantages on shipping companies and would extend construction subsidies to all ships to be used in foreign trade, irrespective of route. Nor is it an indorsement of Maritime Chairman Fleming's observation that construction subsidies (to equalize American with foreign building costs) ought to be 60 percent or more instead of the present maximum of 50 percent.

Also significant is the President's remark that "full account must be taken of the availability of vessels from friendly nations in the event of an emergency" and that "the existence of the North Atlantic Treaty provides a framework within which joint international planning of shipping mobilization may proceed." This is not to say that the United States can put too much reliance on foreign shipping or that there is not need for a basic American merchant marine. But by implication it chides those interests that would squeeze out foreign shipping through larger subsidies to American lines. Shipping is an important element in the recovery of European nations, and these nations often can perform necessary services at far less cost.

Caution on subsidies is well warranted by flagrant irregularities in the Maritime Commission exposed by the Comptroller General and backed by the House Executive Expenditures Committee. To date the commission majority, apparently relying on the influence of shipping advocates in Congress, has evidenced no repentance and has done nothing to stop the evasions of the law. Mr. Truman's message indicates that he has no sympathy with those persons on the commission who have lost sight of the public interest in their zeal to aid the shipping companies. It is essential to have a reexamination of the whole subsidy question within the framework of a national transportation policy.

Results In Ceylon

The deliberations of the Commonwealth of Nations in Ceylon seem to have been much more than a conversational get-together. There are emergent policies which the United States could help to develop and shape in partnership relation. For instance, a working committee has been left with headquarters in Canberra—probably because of the leadership shown by the Australians—to study ways and means of assisting selected areas of southeast Asia. This is an activity which is most welcome. In southeast Asia the race is on between order and disorder. The United States cannot do the job of financing order alone, even under the most generous contribution of any Point IV program. The nations of the Commonwealth have surpluses at their disposal, technical assistance to spare, and the task is formidable enough to call for the joint effort of both the Commonwealth nations and the United Nations.

In political affairs, there will likewise be a welcome in this country for the committee that will set down its ideas on a peace treaty with Japan. How much work on this project has been done in America is uncertain. It would have been a good thing if the conferees had had before them some indication of American ideas of a Japan settlement. The presumption is that no such outline was available. In that event the sooner there is a meeting of minds between the Commonwealth and the United States the better. Reconstruction in Asia, aside from the pacification of Japan, requires a settlement—with or without Russia or China.

The conference discussed a policy toward a country which, in view of the Formosa policy, is now a prime concern in America, viz, Indo-China. The indication came from British Minister of State Malcolm MacDonald that the Bao Dai regime is increasing in strength. The presumption is that it will gather more support from the self-government that the French have at last conceded. Unfortunately self-government has not yet been ratified in Paris. When that step is taken, there is an urgent necessity to decide the issue of recognition. Granted that what is reported is true, recognition might be the "missing component" (to apply Secretary Acheson's phrase) to consolidate the regime, especially if recognition is supported by the kind of economic aid that the Commonwealth envisages. The test of recognition and aid is that control has been secured. With the notable exception of India—which, however, did not enter any objection—most of the Commonwealth members seemed ready to grant recognition. In that event the United States would insure fresh criticism of indecision if there were any lag in recognition.

When the parley started, we called attention to the critical state of Indo-Pakistan relations, in the hope that it would not be ignored. Apparently the conferees sounded out the two disputants, and friendly offices have been accepted for ironing out the economic differences. The trouble here is that one dispute is hard to isolate from the others. They form a complex, calling for across-the-board mediation; and the time has come to merge all the efforts, in the United Nations and elsewhere, to achieve a peaceful settlement. Nevertheless the conference did well in taking up the Indo-Pakistan trouble, and in general justified the hope that the Commonwealth is an instrumentality, and an instrumentality for good, in world affairs. Those who had felt that the body was given a new name merely as a cover-up for its dissolution will have to alter their opinion.

Planes To Rome

Pan American Airways has received a nice little windfall from the Civil Aeronautics Board in the form of preliminary sanction to conduct "charter" flights to Rome during the Catholic Holy Year. The only scheduled United States airline operating to Rome is Trans World. In view of the current recommendation of a CAB examiner that Pan American be permitted to purchase American Overseas Airlines—which would remove the third competitor from the field and place Trans World at a disadvantage—the sanction will look like favoritism. It is no wonder that a TWA protest has led the board to defer final action.

Actually there may be a good deal of point to the board's feeling that the Holy Year traffic will be large enough to support all the flights American lines can provide. Also it may be that Trans World was slow to appreciate the potential, and that Pan American merely showed more initiative in completing an arrangement with Felix Roma, the Catholic travel agency promoting Holy Year tours. Certainly Panam has demonstrated initiative in circularizing American Catholics.

Nonetheless, the CAB has played fast and easy with someone else's market. This is especially true in light of the fact that Panam's "charter" flights actually would amount to regular service. Yet the special excursion rate authorized for Pan American tours is considerably below the fare TWA is compelled to charge on regular flights. Moreover, TWA still has a considerable number of vacant seats on flights to Rome, and it is augmenting its capacity by 30 percent. TWA's grievances have been fanned by Panam's undaunted ambition for the "chosen instrument"—or single American airline abroad in which Panam would play a dominant role—and by the curious lack of publicity preceding the CAB's sudden approval.

Now the CAB has remedied the outright favoritism by opening charter flights to Europe to all regular and large irregular carriers. This removes some of the discrimination; but the proper time to have announced such a policy would be if and after Trans World found itself unable to accommodate the traffic to Rome. It is of course important to promote American travel to Europe. But it is no less important to maintain the integrity of the certificates of convenience and necessity which are the law of regular air transportation. On the Rome run the certificate is in danger of being reduced to a point where it does not mean very much.

Army Open Door

If promises about the Army's new racial policy may be taken at face value, a major milestone has been passed. Under a new circular, Negro soldiers will be assigned on the basis of their skills and qualifications without regard to race. This sensible assignment policy is what is needed to implement the previously announced opening of Army schools and military occupational specialties to Negroes. These advances represent achievement of three of the four principal goals of the Fahy Committee on Equality of Opportunity in the Armed Services. The fourth, abandonment of the racial quota system, remains to be met, but there is reason to hope that the Army will soon adopt the same criteria of intelligence rather than race that obtain in the Air Force and Navy.

It is the principle, rather than the immediate effects of this new policy, that is significant. The Army has at last shorn itself of the negative influence of the foot-draggers who insisted on strict segregation because of the "Negro problem." This influence frustrated the recent decision to open schools and occupational specialties by preventing qualified Negroes from using their training except in Negro units or "overhead" installations.

Caution is still warranted by the well-known ability of individual Army commanders to sabotage policies with which they disagree, and it will be necessary for Secretary Gray to do some policing in order to insure that his orders are carried out in good faith. But an excellent start is being made in the unequivocal directive to assign "critical specialists" to any unit, white or otherwise, and to fill other vacancies with Negroes wherever practicable.

Aside from considerations of equal treatment, this move is fully warranted on practical grounds. The Army is short of certain skills which qualified Negroes are competent to fill. Efficient use of the best available manpower also dictates the substitution of intelligence tests for racial quotas—a practice which in the Air Force has worked out to maintain approximately the same ratio of Negroes to whites. As the Army moves toward integration, which is the only defensible standard for an American fighting force, we believe that its "Negro problem" will disappear.

Living Standards

A kind word in the French press about the condition of American workers comes in the category of news these days. There appears to be a widespread ignorance throughout Europe about the American labor movement, American wage levels and the American collective bargaining process. Communist propaganda has done what it can to make the picture look unpleasant. So it is distinctly a pleasure to learn that the influential Socialist newspaper, Le Populaire, edited by former Premier Leon Blum, published the other day what amounted very nearly to a eulogy on the living conditions of workers in the United States.

The average American worker under capitalism, the newspaper reported, is the best fed, best dressed and most liberally provided with luxuries of any in the world. In fact, he has a purchasing power about four or five times greater than that of his French counterpart. The only flies in his ointment, according to Le Populaire, are that he suffers from a housing shortage and high rentals; he eats too much; and he is high-pressured into constant debt by advertisements offering him automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines and other gadgets on easy credit terms.

Perhaps no amount of American propaganda can refute this soft impeachment. The housing shortage here, as in France, is indubitable; but Frenchmen might like to learn that Congress recently enacted national housing legislation designed to provide homes for low-income families. If the American worker eats too much, it is not, at any rate, because he is compelled to. As for the national habit of buying on time, perhaps it should be pointed out that this creates a considerable number of jobs; and if it keeps workers in debt, this is no doubt because the American living standard has taught them to regard as virtual necessities what workers elsewhere cannot help considering luxuries or extravagances.

The promotion abroad of a realistic appreciation of life in the United States is the best possible American propaganda. Fortunately, representatives of both the AFL and the CIO are stationed in Europe for just this purpose. Talking as American labor union men to the union men overseas, they have an effect beyond anything that official Government spokesmen could hope to achieve. They provide the most effective answer to Soviet propaganda and are among the most productive of American emissaries.

Soliciting Policemen

Once again the campaign-dizzy Washington public is being pressured into donating funds for the Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs.

No one questions the end use of the funds collected, but there is a serious legal and moral question involved as to the propriety of policemen conducting a door-to-door campaign for funds during regular working hours; especially at a time when the department is having "difficulty" in coping with crime and widespread gambling in the District.

It might be well to ask who has given Major Barrett the right to assign eight men and a lieutenant to full-time duty in the Police Boys' Clubs at the taxpayers' expense and at a time when the men are badly needed for law enforcement.

Former Police Superintendent Harvey Callahan, then captain of Number 1 Precinct, had this to say on the subject of policemen collecting funds when he testified in 1941 before a congressional committee: "What's wrong with the Police Department? Inability to devote full time to regular duties. As to fund raising, no law-enforcement officer can sell tickets or solicit funds without neglecting his other duties. . . . No officer can collect money from a person one day and enforce the law fairly against him the next."

The Police Boys Club announced that $1555 was contributed by Washington's coin-machine industry. I wonder why.

Speaking Facetiously

The late James A. Reed, Senator from Missouri and a brilliant orator, once said that experience had taught him to insert the words "I am speaking facetiously" any time this was the case, else some of his listeners were sure to take him seriously. I am the victim in a recent article in The Washington Post by Lee Grove of the failure of somebody to exercise this Senator Reed precaution in the Washington Literary Society.

In rising to speak I accidentally knocked off the glasses of a member who sat close to me. The society made much merriment over it and the secretary in his next meeting's minutes referred to it as if it had been a fist fight. This version has found its way into The Washington Post of New Year's Day where I am assigned a prowess and vigor which I should be only too glad to possess. To continue the facetious line, "I am again complimented."

Too Many Taxis

I wish to congratulate Mr. Harry N. Stull for his column of January 15 headed "Too Many Taxis."

I am not in favor of taking off one taxicab from the present number in operation, because it might work a hardship upon owners. I realize that many Government employes are driving taxis, which is unfair to the regular taxi drivers.

But I am in favor of freezing the number of taxi permits now held. As the present operators go out of business, no more permits should be issued until there is a necessity for more taxis. When new permits are issued they should be given only to persons who mean to earn their living by driving a taxi, instead of operating a taxi as a sideline.

"Academic Accreditation"

Your editorial of January 15 expresses doubt whether the lawyers are to be criticized for their restrictive schooling requirements. Consider these events in the District since 1939 when three years of spare-time study of academic college subjects were added to the three or four years required for the professional subjects. One spare-time law school has given up its law course. Another school has done so indirectly by merging with a university. What will happen respecting two others after the GI enrollment is over remains to be seen.

These are the first steps in a process which deprives spare-time students of the opportunity to prepare for a profession. That has happened respecting medicine, dentistry, pharmacy and a number of other professions. Beyond doubt the expansion of the legal profession will require, in the not distant future, additional schooling for the professional subjects alone. Then the spare-time student will be completely eliminated if these unnecessary academic requirements are retained.

That such requirements are not necessary is evident from the fact that there are judges of the United States Supreme Court, judges of our other courts and leading members of the bar throughout the Nation who did not attend college and who prepared for the profession in exclusively professional courses. Under our Constitution, as construed by a number of courts, professional requirements should not go beyond the point which is necessary to protect the public from incompetency. For this reason, if none other, these requirements should be kept within the reach of those who must get their preparation in spare-time schools.

"Loyalty In The Navy"

In your issue of January 14 you editorialize on the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that when subordinates disagree with their superiors they must expect to be moved "out of the chain o. command."

From a superficial consideration of practices in business administration (unsound even though widely accepted) it may seem just and efficient in such a case to remove the offending officer. However, the reading of history indicates that both Abraham Lincoln and Robert E. Lee (among the greatest of the leaders of men) in practice differed 180 degrees from the principle enunciated by the Secretary o the Navy.

I feel sure an analysis of what they said and did in the matter of leadership will give strong support to your statement that "This iron formula may be the way to get rigid discipline (a la Hitler and Stalin) but is also the way to get a navy (or an army) of puppets."

By applying the Secretary of the Navy's iron formula, Lee would have deprived the Army of Northern Virginia of Jackson after Seven Pines. The early defeat of the Army of Northern Virginia might well have followed. Lincoln would have fired Seward and Stanton. McClellan would have been removed before he had been finally tested. In general Lincoln would have made a holocaust of civilian and military leaders and probably have lost the Union. Great numbers of them differed from him and criticized him bitterly.

A very weak, vindictive or temperamental officer would have no difficulty following this "iron formula" of the Secretary of the Navy. It takes a truly strong, noble and wise leader to follow the formula of tolerance, charity, forgiveness and long-visioned patriotism which characterized Lincoln and Lee in dealing with subordinates.

We have battle-tested, patriotic, high-minded officers of the three elements differing in many cases radically as to the most efficient form for the reorganization of our national defense. No one can know the absolutely correct answer. Years and future experience alone will determine the degree of soundness of decisions made now.

All officers agree absolutely that the decision must rest with the civil element of our Government. All that these officers ask—and it is but fair and reasonable to assume that all are animated by love of country—is to have the experience of the past, and the viewpoints of important officers who have had this experience, to be made of public record and carefully to be weighed by the responsible civilians in coming to the decision.

I believe Lincoln and Lee under similar circumstances would welcome these vigorously expressed and often contradictory opinions and viewpoints and then would wisely decide. The decision might be contrary to all the expressed viewpoints, as often was the case with Lincoln's decisions. But it is not conceivable that any officer would be affected in his official position by any dissent from the views or the decision of Lincoln or Lee. There would be no application of the so-called "iron formula."

A. G. GIBSON,
Colonel, USA (Ret.).

Washington.

When personal opinions contrary to existing policy are publicly elicited by the Congress, it is quite conceivable that, according to his particular administrative responsibilities, one's ability to acquit himself therefore is seriously jeopardized. It is an accepted tenet of military discipline that all orders transmitted by an individual should appear to have his individual approval regardless of whether originated by him or higher authority. Where honesty demands public enunciation of disapproval it is manifest that the continuity of authority has been weakened.

In such circumstance it is entirely within the purview of the higher authority, and undeniably in the best interests of the loyal subordinate (whose integrity would otherwise thereafter be severely on trial) to reassign that individual to a post that invokes a less direct responsibility for the active administration of the particular policy. Such a consequence could hardly be construed as punishment, since it may well be envisioned how the only proper course left for an individual who cannot conscientiously administer a program with which he is not in sympathy is to respectfully request reassignment. In such case he would still be bound not to disclose his personal views unnecessarily.

Of course, no defense can be made out for those overzealous crusaders who exhibit an exaggerated and misguided sense of mission which equates sincerity and infallibility. They evidence a lack of appreciation of the inherently autocratic nature of military service.

Overcoming Job Jitters

By Malvina Lindsay

U. S. Bogeyman

HERE IS JOB fear raising its ugly head again just at a time when the economy looked so rosy. A preliminary report to the committee planning the Mid-century White House Conference on Children and Youth has to you a familiar ring.

It reveals that the one characteristic anxiety of American children is that daddy will lose his job. This is a reflection, its interpreters say, of adult conversation in the home, especially around the dinner table.

You remember the polls that showed job jitters the number one worry of Americans; the recent warning of Secretary of Commerce Sawyer that despite the high level of employment, jobs are not being created fast enough to keep up with all the new people wanting them; the rapid rise in payments to jobless from State unemployment insurance funds; the recent study by the Illinois Society for Mental Hygiene on the emotional ills that unemployment of parents brings on children.

You think of the need for more jobs, not only for eager youth coming out of high school and college each spring, but also for the increasing number of middle-aged and even elderly women thrown on their own. Had not the hard fact that a woman's chief security at almost any age lay in her earning power just been thrown at a large group of well-to-do New York women by Dr. Margaret Myers, Vassar College economics professor? It is becoming almost impossible, Dr. Myers told these women assembled to learn about the management of money, for a man to earn enough for his wife to live in idleness all the years she survives.

YOU also recall that reports of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor show the steady entry of wives into the labor market. And on top of all this, job jitters are creeping in!

But, after all, is not fear of unemployment inevitable in an industrial society? Now, back in the good old days when people grew up on farms there was no occasion for job worry.

Yet . . . there was economic fear then, of droughts, cyclones, insect plagues, failing crops, collapsed prices. There was even fear of the poorhouse—plenty of it, in fact. Why, you are constantly encountering someone who tells you of a rural childhood darkened by parents' warnings about the poorhouse.

Yes, man had his worries about security even in the days when individualism supposedly was rampant. Yet . . . joblessness is a more serious thing in rented quarters in a big city than in a place where one can fall back to some degree on Mother Earth.

HOW THEN are jobs to be created? Your ears ring with the formulas—take off taxes, and encourage venture capital; start more pork-barrel projects in the States; get Government's nose out of business; put more money in the hands of workers; give oldsters big pensions to spend; start more Federal works; encourage small business; encourage (or curb) big business.

Yet you wonder if the long-range answer doesn't include some intangibles—of attitudes, character, education. Historians emphasize that the outstanding event in the Nation's development has been the movement west. Now there is no more West geographically in which to find new jobs, new security. And another great drama that captured American imagination as the Nation grew industrially—the rise of the millionaire—also is becoming more of a mirage.

Yet, other frontiers are developing, notably that of science. Why are we not doing more in the schools to acquaint children with atomic energy—the force that is opening a new world, a new epoch, one with untold job opportunities? Or will our fears keep this frontier hidden until possibly other nations beat us to its industrial exploration?

Then there is the frontier of human relationships, including the distribution of goods and of opportunities, also the supplying of the great field of wants man has that cannot be met with gadgets. Yet attempts to get public support for research in social sciences always have brought man's fears racing to its opposition, in Congress and elsewhere.

Yes, the jobs can be created. The equivalent of the prairie, the wilderness, the gold fields, is there. But the hurdle of fear will have first to be taken, not only in the homes where parents talk of daddy's losing his job but in the places where more fortunate people still are afraid of the future.

Symphony Conductor

Raoul Berger, whose letter appeared January 12, should realize it is a little late to be arguing over the board of directors' choice of a conductor for our orchestra. The time to have spoken was at the time of, or before, the late Dr. Kindler's resignation.

It is ridiculous to expect them to fire Mr. Mitchell now simply because his name is not Beecham, Szell, or Toscanini.

Continuing Mr. Berger's poor analogy of a baseball player, no manager would send a player to the minor leagues if he were batting close to 1.000, nor does every ballplayer begin in the minor leagues.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Germany's Policy And Our Own

TWO PIECES of news from Germany, both within the past week, show, I believe, that neither in Paris nor in Bonn do the men who know the score think that the present situation can last very much longer.

Lippmann

One was the story brought to light by Mr. Drew Middleton that Dr. Adenauer had made contact through Lieut. Gen. Kurt von Manteuffel with a group of 18 German generals and staff officers, called the Brudershaft, and that he has received from them a plan for German rearmament.

The other story was that Dr. Adenauer had raised the question of the Sarre Valley the day after negotiations began in Paris between the French Foreign Office and the semi-autonomous government of the Sarre.

There is a connecting link between these two apparently unrelated stories. Almost certainly it is that both Mr. Schuman and Dr. Adenauer are making ready for the reopening of the whole question of a German peace treaty.

THE MILITARY proposals show what the Germans believe to be the probable timetable. They call for one infantry division by June of this year, and then an armored division by 1951. It is evident that these proposals have nothing to do with Field Marshal Mongomery's day dream, which some of our own officers in the Pentagon have been dreaming too, that the Germans can be induced to supply the troops while the Western nations supply the equipment and the generals for a Western army.

The German officers and Dr. Adenauer are not thinking of one infantry division by this June and one armored division by 1951 as rearmament to stop the Red army from advancing across the Elbe. They know quite well that you do not stop a bear with a popgun; if you try it, you will only provoke him. They are thinking of the time when the Red Army evacuates East Germany, leaving behind it the so-called "people's police," a German force now under the command of General Mueller. Apparently they expect the Russians to make a move some time this spring looking to the actual withdrawal, or to the opening of negotiations for the withdrawal, of the armies of occupation.

THE GERMAN officers, though their armies have been disbanded and most of their heavy equipment removed, continue to have the main elements of a general staff, appointed it is supposed before the surrender in 1945, and they are known in any event to be operating an intelligence service. There is no impenetrable iron curtain separating the German officers who live in the west from those who live in the east, and there can be little doubt that more or less clandestine communication and intercourse goes on continually among the officers on both sides of the line, as well as among politicians and businessmen. The estimate of these officers as to what is coming—namely decisions affecting the whole of Germany—must be taken seriously.

So, too, must the French estimate. For among the three Western delegations the French delegation now in Germany is by all odds the most competent, the best-informed and the most expertly trained, in German affairs. The action of the French government in respect to the Sarre shows that like the Bonn government it believes that the time is rapidly approaching when the German peace treaty will be dealt with. Mr. Schuman and Dr. Adenauer disagree about the Sarre. But they understand each other very well because they both know that the period of the great decisions about Germany is near. Both are getting ready for it.

DR. ADENAUER, a shrewd and far-sighted man who may yet prove to be the German Talleyrand if he survives long enough, has a quite understandable policy. It is to obtain every possible concession from the Western nations before he comes to grips in his negotiations with Eastern Germany and the Soviet Union. He wants enough soldiers to offset the east German soldiers if and when the Red Army withdraws. But he wants also to have a free hand in his negotiations with the East. He would have a very free hand if there were nothing left—as regards territory, reparations, or sovereignty—which he has to negotiate with the West.

There is almost nothing left now except the Sarre, permission to rearm, and the American subsidy which gives the Western powers a hold on the Adenauer government. If he could get the Sarre now, if he were allowed to rearm now, and if he could be assured that the American subsidy would continue for some considerable time to come, then the German settlement and the German peace treaty would be made—with France, Great Britain and the United States on the outside of the real negotiations, more or less committed to the unreserved support of Dr. Adenauer but without any certainty that they knew what was going on. Dr. Adenauer would then have everything that the West has to offer before he began to deal with the East.

THE FIRM stand taken on the Sarre by Mr. Schuman, which happily has the support of Mr. Bevin and Mr. Acheson, involves something much greater than the disposition of the Sarre Valley itself. It means that the Western powers intend to have a principal part in the coming German settlement, that there is a limit to the process of liquidating their influence and power which has been going on in recent month.

THE GREAT trouble with this liquidation, as Mr. McCloy has managed it, is that he has been acting without full realization that a German settlement is necessary and without a clear idea of what it involves. Indeed the Americans in Germany have been under the illusion that the separate state of West Germany is a more or less permanent thing, that the partition can last, and that western Germany as such can be integrated into the Atlantic community. And since the western German politicians are decent and able men, our German policy has been to help them by persuading the French and the British to give them what they ask.

But the western German politicians are Germans, patriotic Germans, and never will any honest and patriotic German regard the west German state as anything but a transitory makeshift on the way to an all-German settlement. No German will accept a divided Germany, with the western part the client of the United States and the eastern part the satellite of the Soviet Union. Therefore, though the controls and the symbols of defeat do have to be liquidated, they should not be liquidated in such a way as to deprive the western nations of their bargaining power in the all-German settlement.

BOTH IN Germany and in the State Department there is needed now, if we are to be prepared for what is coming, a fresh examination of the German question. Mr. Acheson should find another Jessup to reexamine the situation.

For there is no use disguising the fact that Mr. McCloy, with all his political ability and high purposes, does not speak or understand German, does not know Germany, especially political Germany and its history and its traditions, and that his political advisers in Germany are, as compared with the men against whom they must match their wits, novices.

Bill to Erase 2% Tax on Food

Baltimore, Jan. 18 (AP).—A drive is underway to get the Legislature to exempt food eaten in restaurants from the 2 per cent sales tax.

A spokesman for the Maryland Restaurant Association said Governor Lane will be asked to sponsor such a bill at next month's General Assembly session.

Failing in this, the organization plans to have the amendment introduced, anyway.

The present law specifies that food consumed on the premises where it is sold comes under the statute. Food bought for use at home is exempt from the levy.

Formosa Firsters

By Marquis Childs

What Is There To Aid?

THE DRIFT of American foreign policy in Europe toward stalemate or retrogression seems to have escaped the attention of most Americans. Partly this is because of the deliberate and calculated tactics of the Soviet Union and partly because of the noisy quarrel over China.

Childs

That is a part of the tragic disservice the advocates of Chiang Kai-shek are now doing. With their loud cries and their angry demands, carried so far as to call for the resignation of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, they are masking and concealing perhaps the most serious aspect of America's position in the world today.

Secretary Acheson is forced back to being a lawyer for the defense. His attention and his energy are diverted. His lawyer-like qualities of logic and precision, which do not always serve an imaginative and forward-looking foreign policy, are accentuated.

The Chinese Communists hold all of China except the small island of Formosa. No power that the United States can bring to bear will dislodge them. That is a reality which even Senator William F. Knowland acknowledged when he was interviewed on the Meet the Press air program.

Yet Knowland and the other advocates of Chiang would ignore that reality. They would tie American prestige—what is left of it in Asia—to the beleaguered and discredited generalissimo in what is not so much a last stand as a final desperate hide-out.

NOT MERELY this folly, there is also the danger that these advocates, or the more irresponsible among them, will deliberately take their revenge by attacking and curtailing the present program for Europe. It is hard to see how the man in the Kremlin could be better served.

Since the announcement of Russia's atomic explosion last September, there has been no discernible alteration in American policy in Europe. It is as though that world-shattering event had never occurred. This is pointed out with great cogency and force by Professor Hans Morgenthau of the University of Chicago at the current Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. He quotes from a statement made in Parliament two years ago by Winston Churchill:

"I will only venture now to say that there seems to me to be very real danger in going on drifting too long. I believe that the best chance of preventing a war is to bring matters to a head and come to a settlement with the Soviet government before it is too late. This would imply that the Western democracies, who should, of course, seek unity among themselves at the earliest moment, would take the initiative in asking the Soviet for a settlement.

"It is idle to reason or argue with the Communists. It is, however, possible to deal with them on a fair, realistic basis, and, in my experience, they will keep their bargains as long as it is in their interest to do so, which, in this grave matter, may be a long time, once things are settled . . ."

Those are words of extraordinary wisdom. They should, if anything could, jar us out of the seeming indifference and complacency with which the present grim realities are ignored and the drift allowed to continue. This country is in fact preparing neither for peace nor for war.

Note that Churchill stresses the need for the unity of the Western democracies. One of the most disastrous consequences of the China diversion is to separate the United States from the nations in Europe and Asia with which we should be most closely aligned.

THERE SHOULD be no illusions about the British policy in recognizing China. That is not the Labor government, but a national policy with the widest possible approval. This was made abundantly clear in the series of editorials that appeared simultaneously in a number of British newspapers ranging from conservative to liberal. Those editorials pointed out the grave danger in the United States and Britain following opposite and even hostile lines of policy with respect to China.

Informed diplomats are beginning to ask why Mao-Tung has been in Moscow for nearly a month and yet no treaty or accord has been announced with a great propaganda fanfare. Ordinarily such things are consummated within a few days after the visitor's arrival. It may, of course, mean nothing, and the fanfare may come tomorrow. Yet, on the other hand, it could mean a disagreement over Manchuria or some other sensitive point.

Yet, if something like this were to occur in the near future, this Government would be in no position to exploit it. The advocates of Chiang seem determined to force American policy-makers into a straight jacket.

Of course, there have been mistakes in the past, and grievous mistakes. One reason for the errors was that the Chiang lobby was so determined that American aid should focus completely on their hero, ignoring able men in his camp who might have been used as a corrective. But all this is no reason to compound the past with suicidal errors in the present.

Vaughan Given Sharp Rebuke By Senate '5 Percent' Probers

Nation," said the report to the Senate, "the American people have presented gifts to the President and his family as a token of their esteem and a mark of respect for the high office he holds. Nothing said herein is intended to be critical of that long-standing tradition."

The report, however, made no other exceptions, and it reminded Government officials that they were not given presents because the donor liked the color of their eyes.

The Senators used their sharpest language in reprimanding Vaughan for his friendship with Maragon, now under perjury indictment. They said this friendship made it possible for Maragon "to use the great prestige of the White House for his own private advantage."

Vaughan's Job Seems Safe

When the first phase of the 5-percenter hearing was concluded September 1, President Truman was asked if he contemplated any change in the office of White House military aide. Mr. Truman, speaking with emphasis, said that he did not.

General Vaughan declined to comment yesterday on the Senate subcommittee's report.

'I'm too busy now," he told White House reporters. "I have no statement to make whatsoever."

A little later, he posed for photographers, and they quoted him as saying:

"I wonder what this is all about? I thought they were through with it."

When one of the photographers told him that "this probably is the end of it," Vaughan remarked:

"That's what I hope. That's what I'm looking for."

The Senate subcommittee, in describing Maragon as an "outright fixer," said this type moved in an "aura of connivance" and sought to give the impression that the only way to deal with the Government was the devious way.

"There is no doubt," the report continued, "that Maragon's friendship with Gen. Harry H. Vaughan made his activities in his dealings with the Federal Government possible.

"In several instances the evidence showed that General Vaughan or his office personally interceded with Government agencies on behalf of Maragon or those whom he represented. In others.

"Connected With White House"

"On several occasions Maragon succeeded in convincing Government officials he was officially connected with the White House and at his request they called on him in his suite at the Carlton Hotel to discuss his cases.

"In some instances Maragon used the telephone facilities of General Vaughan's White House office in the conduct of his personal business.

"A combination of these and other factors made it possible for Maragon to use the great prestige of the White House for his own private advantage.

"In seems incredible to the subcommittee that over a period of several years a man like Maragon could continue his nefarious activities in dealing with Government officials. This is particularly true because several of his dubious activities of recent years have received attention in the public press and because in 1945 he was caught by the Customs officials smuggling essential oils used in the manufacture of perfume in this country."

No Tanforan Conclusion

The subcommittee withheld any conclusions in connection with the cases involving the Allied Molasses Co. the Tanforan race track in California, and the Verley Co., explaining all may play a part in Maragon's trial for perjury.

Herbert C. Hathorn, formerly a minor official in the Department of Agriculture, testified on August 17 that Vaughan asked him by phone to do something about the Allied Molasses Co., which had been declared a "wilfull violator" of a rationing order. Others testified Maragon had been hired to help the company.

It also was brought out that Vaughan called on Housing Expediter Tighe Woods in 1947 and asked him to "please hurry up" action on a construction permit for the Tanforan race track. The permit was granted one day later.

The subcommittee pointed out that Vaughan is Coordinator of Veterans Affairs as well as White House military aide. It said it was not clear why he "attempted to expedite the application for the obtaining of building materials for a race track at a time when he must have known that in doing so he was reducing the materials available for veterans' housing, although General Vaughan maintained that his only interest was in having the matter determined."

On the Verley Co. and the deep freezers, the report condemned acceptance by "some Government officials" of "gratuities" from persons with whom they do business.

"Except for the President and his family, any public official who accepts a gratuity, even if he thinks it is not a quid pro quo, makes a serious mistake . . . he is not getting the gift because the donor likes the color of his eyes . . . The . . . solution . . . is to refuse . . any gratuities from businessmen or others who may do business with the Government."

General Vaughan denied impropriety in helping President Bennett of the Verley Co. and Maragon, to get passports for flights to Europe.

The subcommittee report was filed with the Senate by Senator Hoey (D., N. C.) the chairman. Democrats approving it were O'Conor, Maryland; Eastland, Mississippi, and Robertson, Virginia; Republicans, McCarthy, Wisconsin; Mundt, South Dakota and Margaret Chase Smith, Maine.

U. S. Seeks Injunction to Bar 3-Day Week in Coal Mines probably take a year or so to complete.

Judge Richmond B. Keech conferred with the Government's attorneys, and gave John L. eight days—until Thursday, January 26 to prepare arguments showing cause why the court should not grant the injunction.

Acting on charges filed with the NLRB by five groups of coal producers, General Counsel Denham accused Lewis and the miners of:

1. Failing to bargain in good faith with the operators over a new contract, ever since the old work contract expired July 1, 1949.

2. Demanding an illegal form of union shop, an illegal type of welfare fund.

3. Nullifying the mutual nature of the management union contract by insisting on a clause permitting the miners to work only when they were "willing and able."

4. "Clubbing" the operators into accepting the "illegal" contract by "coercive methods" such as the three-day work week.

Denham asked for an injunction to ban all these "unfair practices."

"Information coming to us from the various parts of the United States," Denham said, "indicates that irreparable damage is being done to numerous businesses, schools, churches, colleges and individuals throughout the country by reason of the curtailment of the production of coal.

Denham did not ask the court for immediate relief, however, "because I did not think we could get it."

He also observed that if the union struck for other than "illegal" purposes, the injunction would not prevent such a walkout.

Other coal developments yesterday:

John P. Busarello, UMW chieftain for District 5, disclosed that John L. Lewis had followed up his earlier "suggestion" with a flat order that all miners return to the pits on the three-day work basis. Around 90,000 of John L.'s 488,000 miners ignored the "suggestion" and stayed out all the week.

Five Akron, Ohio rubber companies appealed to the White House for quick action, asserting that shortage of electric power threatened their supply of vital zinc-oxide.

Rationing in Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh retail coal merchants agreed to ration their remaining coal supplies and gave hospitals top priority.

Gov. John S. Battle of Virginia, in an inaugural address, asked for peacetime powers to seize the State's coal mines. Virginia's chief executive also has such power under war-emergency legislation.

The Senate Labor Committee opened hearings on the GOP-sponsored joint resolution calling on the President to invoke the Taft-Hartley Act. Commitee Chairman Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) asked Ferguson (R., Mich.) what he expected to accomplish by such a resolution.

"I think public opinion has a bearing on what the President and Congress do," Ferguson replied. He added he thought Lewis would be affected too.

CIO President Philip Murray was quick to side with Lewis and against Denham's action. Murray said he was instructing the CIO's legal staff to cooperate with Lewis' lawyers "in support of the basic labor principles involved. He called Denham's action against Lewis a "challenge to the legitimate rights and interests of all organized labor."

Acheson Sees No Change in A-Policy

positive solution of the United States-Russian deadlock.

Accordingly, other explanations of Acheson's remarks were postulated.

In the first place, it is known that he, like all others concerned with the momentous question whether to construct a hydrogen bomb or not, is under the most rigorous White House injunction not to discuss the matter in any way.

The Administration policy is to suspend discussion of the question insofar as possible until the President can announce his decision or recommendation for a program.

Second, there has been no official acknowledgment of the fact—well known unofficially—that it appears feasible to build such a weapon, with destructive power anywhere from 100 to 1000 times that of a plutonium bomb.

No Official Cognizance

Thus, even though Acheson's questioner referred specifically to the hydrogen bomb as a "real or prospective" atomic weapons development, the Secretary of State was not in a position to take official cognizance of it.

He spoke in careful terms, instead, of the Russian explosion and acknowledged that ever since it was detected, its consequences on policy of all sorts, and particularly in relation to the international stand of the United States, had been under study.

He added that so far he saw no reason to modify these United States views in any way, and knew of nothing in the works that would lead to any change.

If any change is in store, it was learned yesterday from other sources, it is far from being formulated. The decision — or, more properly, a recommendation—rests with the President.

Highly placed officials yesterday indicated to The Washington Post that as far as they knew, the President had not yet made up his mind. They expressed their "hope," however, that he would within a matter of a few weeks.

Public Debate Subject

And they added that the very nature of the question, and its enormous moment, was such that whatever Mr. Truman decided would become known, if it were not in fact publicly proclaimed, and would then become subject for public debate.

At the moment, the official group advising him on the superbomb problem consists of Acheson, Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Atomic Energy Commission Chairman David E. Lilienthal.

In addition, of course, a beginning has been made on exploring the question with Congress, through the agency of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, top United States military official, is due to testify before that committee in secret today, and probably on the superbomb subject.

As nearly as can be determined, most military officials lean heavily to the opinion that the United States should proceed with constructing the bomb. Their feeling, as military men, is that they cannot do anything else except make the most powerful weapons possible.

A majority, though not all, of the Joint Congressional Committee is thought to take the same view.

Opposition in AEC

A majority of the AEC, however, opposes construction of the bomb, at least until every avenue of negotiation with the Russians for international atomic control is explored.

The AEC's General Advisory Committee, a body of outstanding nuclear scientists, is unanimously, or almost unanimously, opposed to making the bomb.

That committee doubtless reflects the majority opinion of United States atomic scientists. They, perhaps more than any other vocal group, have pinned their hope to a solution through international agreement.

The question that the President apparently is centering on is how to use the American capability of making an engine of destruction, something beyond even a Buck Rogers dream, as a force toward a peaceful agreement of the outstanding United States-Russian issues.

On the one hand, there may be the possibility of using its imminent construction as a threat. On the other, theer may be the possibility of agreeing not to build it, in return for agreement by the Soviet on atomic control and other issues.

It is conceded that Russian scientists and engineers also have the capability of making the hydrogen bomb. All the basic scientific theory involved has been available for study since 1939. And if the Russians have built a plutonium or uranium bomb, then they have a great deal of the necessary technical know-how for a superbomb.

Inspection Essential

Therefore, it is considered essential that any agreement on relinquishment of atomic weapons—plutonium and hydrogen bombs—must involve intense inspection, for the security of all parties.

It is thought unlikely here that Mr. Truman can come to any conclusion and expect to keep it secret.

If his recommendation is against making the bomb, members of Congress holding an opposite opinion will be sure to know it, through their Joint Atomic Committee, and to be vocal about it.

If the decision is positive, the sum of money needed for construction, although not as large as has been previously reported, is large enough. It cannot be provided out of some already-existing kitty of the AEC. So the decision will again have to go to Congress to be carried out. Scientists and others opposed to the plan will, in their turn, be equally vocal.

More Than 1000 Buyers Shop at Gift Show

More than 100 buyers from department stores, specialty shops and gift shoppes have been casting wary professional glances the past three days at 1001 items on display over three floors of the Hotel Willard.

It's Washington's first "gift show," where some 100 exhibitors of everything you, or more likely your wife, might buy as a gift, are displaying their wares and taking orders.

You can imagine what that means. As one exhibitor put it, "you can find anything here from a 50-cent souvenir to a $1500 antique," but they're showing these items to commercial buyers only.

There's enough variety to please all known tastes, from straight gags and gadgets to conservative solidity.

Under gags, there's a little number consisting of a set of false teeth which turns out to be a bottle opener, or the "hangover hat," a cloth and plastic affair with elastic back to allow head expansion, a zipper bag on top for ice, and appropriate signs on front.

Barbecue aprons with several pockets, an egg-cup for two eggs with saucer attached, a giant and powerful bottle opener about four inches in width, and an intriguing "sugar plum tree" are among the useful gadgets.

One of the more "solid" items is a set of plates which reproduce four of Grandma Moses' famous primitive paintings. Grandma received a cool $10,000 for the plate rights, the exhibitor said.

All this—and china, glass, leather, silver and other gift items—is being purchased, though rather cautiously, by the buyers, the majority of whom are from the District, Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, North and South Carolina and Pennsylvania.

Buyers like to come to Washington, they said, preferring the District to Philadelphia, the nearest city to this area that has previously had the show.

And the exhibitors? They like it here, too. But some of them have found that "Southerners," as one expressed it, "don't go for pressure stuff. They want to be treated like gentlemen when you show them your line. Once they're sold, though, they're loyal."

WHY NOT?

How New Battle Plan Would Benefit Area

The 45 million dollar gift to Virginia localities for new schools, proposed yesterday by Governor John S. Battle, would mean this to neighboring Old Dominion areas:

1. Arlington County could erect a million-dollar junior high school in the southeastern part of the county near newly developed subdivisions.

2. Alexandria would have more than a half million dollars to apply toward a new million-dollar white high school.

3. Fairfax County could add classrooms to present elementary and high schools to eliminate 77 improvised classrooms in gymnasiums, Quonset huts, churches and auditoriums, using a fund of almost a million dollars.

4. Falls Church, now operating its own school system, would use an expected $50,000 to help on three current projects—erection of a new junior-senior high school costing about a million, building of a new primary school and making additinos to the present Madison - Jefferson Elementary School.

Approval Needed

These indications, based on an unofficial estimate of the income which the Virginia units would derive from the "Battle Fund," came from nearby area school officials. Each emphasized that such matters would have to come before the respective boards of education before official plans could be made for use of the funds. Those projects cited have top priority, in their opinions.

Governor Battle, in his inaugural address, suggested that $40,500,000—what remains after a 10 percent deduction for an equalization fund—be distributed on the basis of school "membership." This figure in each locality would include all the locality's children attending public school in the locality on a given date, to be selected later.

In the past school year, the total "membership" in Virginia schools was 547,874. This number divided into $40,500,000 means $73.92 per student.

Alexandria's Share

Thus Alexandria, which had "membership" of 6930, would receive $511,265 from the fund. Superintendent of Schools T. C. Williams said this amount, if appropriated, would probably be used "to pay off some indebtedness on buildings now under construction" or "to start on others needed in the future."

The top project on the latter list is a new white high school with 25 classrooms he declared. A site has been purchased on the western end of town near MacArthur Elementary School.

In Arlington, which had a "membership" of 13,052 last year, the county share would be about $964,803. Dr. Edward J. Braun, assistant superintendent of schools, said such a sum "could well be used for another junior school or to expand present elementary schools."

The county has an extensive 6½-million-dollar building program underway, using bond issues for funds.

$978,479 to Fairfax

The Fairfax County "membership," as of this month, is 13,237, which would give it about $978,479 under the proposed program. No earlier "membership" figures are available because the Falls Church group was separated from the county program only last summer.

Fairfax school board chairman Fred W. Robinson said this sum "would be a help" toward a 12-million-dollar school construction program proposed by the board. Residents are presently signing petitions seeking authority for issuance of bonds to raise the sum gradually.

One of the principal aims of the program, "and a most pressing one," according to Robinson, is building of classroom capacity to replace 77 improvised rooms in various structures. The $978,479 amount "would just about do it," Robinson declared.

Aid to Falls Church

The over-all program calls for erection of two new high schools and 15 elementary schools and classroom additions to present buildings.

The newest school system — Falls Church — would receive about $78,576 under the program, using a current "membership" of 1063. Superintendent of schools Irvin H. Schmitt said such an amount would probably be used toward the entire building program.

'Airphibian' Lands in District, Cruises Into Town to Confuse and Amuse Folks

The Washington Post

Robert Fulton of Connecticut prepares to drive into town in his airphibian, sans wings

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

"Eventually," as Robert Fulton said, "man must come back to earth."

So he landed at National Airport, removed wings, propellor and tail—and drove into Washington.

Acting Secretary of Commerce C. V. Whitney and CAA Administrator D. W. Rentzel came out into the Commerce Department courtyard yesterday to see Fulton's "airphibian."

Both semed impressed. Whitney who can both fly a plane and drive an automobile, was trying to work an airphibian drive and air-ride into his schedule.

The machine cruises at 110 miles per hour in the air, 40 to 45 on the ground. Carries two passengers. Gets an hour's flying on 9 gallons of gas, 20 miles driving on one. Conversion into a plane or back to an auto takes three and one-half minutes and one person can do it.

Fulton, 40, of Newtown, Conn., and descendant of the steamboat inventor, devised it because he got annoyed.

He was tired and angry at spending three hours flying somewhere, then three hours more getting into town.

"What has a car got?" he asked himself, and answered: "Engine, wheels, controls, place to sit. What has an airplane got? Same thing—except you add tail, prop and a pair of wings."

He has an experimental license now, hopes to go into commercial production soon.

Fulton is visiting with friends in Chevy Chase. The milkman saw the airphibian parked in the driveway, asked Fulton's friends: "What've you got—a visitor from Mars?"

Looks like that, especially with that sign on the side "Attach wings here."

But that piece of metal on the back brings you down to Earth: It's a Connecticut auto license plate.

Kerns Farm Owner Loses Zoning Plea

An application for rezoning of the 89-acre Kerns Farm near Falls Church, Va., was rejected yesterday by the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors.

Mrs. Jessie P. Kerns, owner of the property, sought to have the tract rezoned from suburban residential to urban residential.

This would have paved the way for sale of the land to a development company which proposes to erect low-cost homes. The site is 1 mile south of Falls Church on Annandale rd., near Lee blvd.

Owners of expensive homes nearby, ranging in value from $15,000 to $60,000, some of them in the exclusive Sleepy Hollow section, opposed the application.

More than 50 of these residents turned out yesterday for the hearing.

Battle Asks $45 Million for Virginia Schools

out his speech, in which he also:

1. Said with "regret" he cannot recommend decreased taxes; nor would he ask for increases.
2. Asked for broad peacetime powers over the State's coal industry, permitting him to seize mines for State operation "in the event it becomes necessary."
3. Urged that "some additional funds be provided" for continuing improvements to Virginia mental hospitals.
4. Recommended expansion of local health centers, with a warning against "the ever-growing attitude . . . that the State owes everyone a livelihood."
5. Proposed adoption of Tuck's budget to give teachers a minimum salary of $2000, or an average increase of about $150 per year.
6. Promised to use "every resource of the executive department" to overcome a lack of thorough instruction in Virginia and local history in State schools.
7. Recommended that school boards be elected by county boards of supervisors.
8. Asked "definite, possibly radical, action" to bring peace in the Potomac River "oyster war" between Maryland and Virginia.
9. Requested a bill to permit women to serve on juries voluntarily.
10. Requested legislation to revise rules of practice in Virginia courts, many of which are "ancient and archaic."

4000 See Ceremony

The ceremonies which inducted the 59-year-old lawyer and legislator as Governor of Virginia took place under a bright sun and before more than 4000 spectators.

The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Edward W. Hudgins of the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Before the successor to Tuck, who is 53, was inaugurated, the oath of office was administered to Lieut. Gov. L. Preston Collins and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr.

After Battle officially became Governor, he shook hands with United States Senator Harry F. Byrd whose "organization" in the Old Dominion he will head. Then there was a 19-gun salute for Battle and an hour-long parade before the reviewing stand.

At a press conference following his address, Governor Battle said Administration bills to carry out the 45-million-dollar gifts to localities for schools and to give him power to seize coal mines will be introduced in the General Assembly probably tomorrow.

Windswept Portico

Battle's address, delivered from the windswept South Portico of the stately Virginia Capitol, was a faithful execution of pledges made in his campaign last summer, when he defeated three other candidates for the governorship.

It was also a faithful proclamation of his role as an apostle of the Byrd "organization" in Virginia, with economy the watchword and self-support its companion.

He said he expected there would be large demands for money on the Legislature, but cautioned that they must be "carefully examined," because "we are administering trust funds committed to our keeping by the people of Virginia."

He asked that distribution of grants to localities for construction be made on the basis of the number of pupils "actually enrolled in the schools upon a given date, say December 1, 1949.

Membership Formula

Many thought he would use the familiar formula of "average daily attendance." But educators in the Capitol said the "membership" formula presents duplication of individual pupils in counting the total, since many transfer from one school to another during the year.

Battle said that "school buildings must be constructed for the children enrolled in the schools."

"A locality in which, on account of local conditions, the school attendance is not so regular as it is in other parts of the State, should not be penalized on account of those local conditions."

Before the 45 million dollar capital outlay is broken down, however, the Governor asked that 10 percent of it be placed in an "equalization fund."

This would be granted to localities "in which the taxable values are smallest and in which reasonable effort has been made by the local authorities to meet their own needs."

Another word of cheer to poverty-stricken school officials was Battle's proposal that 14 million dollars be transferred from the State bond sinking fund to replenish the depleted State literary fund, from which counties have borrowed money for school construction.

With this total and the annual increase of two million dollars a year in the literary fund, "it would appear that trustees of that fund should be in a position to meet all proper demands upon it," Battle said.

At his later press conference, he added: "We would attempt to operate only those mines which we could handle, and only when the supply of coal becomes dangerously low."

Nor did he neglect those localities which "have borrowed large sums of money and gone ahead with school construction."

If they need no more buildings "at this time," Battle said, they should be permitted "to apply their proportionate share of the 45 million dollar construction fund to the payment of debts incurred for school construction, irrespective of the date of the indebtedness."

One reason for the urgency of the appropriation, he added, is to permit localities to get buildings started under "favorable conditions in spring and summer."

Besides increased teachers' salaries, he said the State is "now able to largely liberalize our teacher and State employe retirement system and provide increased benefits thereunder."

In other fields, many of Battle's proposals already have been introduced in the General Assembly.

Delegate Armistead L. Boothe, of Alexandria, is copatron on several bills to streamline judicial rules and regulations. Delegate Charles F. Unruh of Westmoreland, has introduced five bills for joint Maryland-Virginia control of the Potomac River oyster beds. Delegate Frank P. Moncure of Stafford, has asked that women be permitted to serve on juries, and State Senator Harry F. Byrd, jr., of Winchester, has proposed that all county school boards be elected by boards of supervisors.

On labor relations, Battle said he would further the policies of the Tuck administration to prevent work stoppages in public utilities and to insure everyone the right to work.

The new Governor said, however, there 'appears to be little basis in fact" for the hope that troubles in the coal industry in Virginia may be "amicably adjusted."

He then asked for a law to enable him, "in the event it becomes necessary," to seize coal mines that "may be operated by the State, and to direct the distribution of coal equitably among the people and industries of the Commonwealth."

Snead Beats Tired Hogan by 4 Strokes in Playoff

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

AS AN HONOR GRADUATE of Wake Forest College, it is assumed with some certainty that Ray Scarborough can read; and if he is reading the current sports pages he is probably a very baffled young man and wondering what is cock-eyed about his sense of values.

He is reading in the papers that Bob Feller of the Cleveland Indians has signed a 1950 contract calling for a salary reported to be $45,000. That could be bewildering to Scarborough who is trying to save his own $17,000 salary of last season from a slash.

POVICH

It is doubtless occurring to Scarborough that he had a better pitching record than Feller last season, even under the handicap of pitching for the last-place Nats. While Feller was winning 15 and losing 14 for the third-place Indians, Scarborough achieved 13 wins and only 11 defeats for a Washington club that won 39 fewer games than the outfit Feller worked for.

The advantages of working for Cleveland are obvious enough, yet Feller's winning average was not as impressive as Scarborough's. The Nats' pitcher may be forgiven for any impression that he is an unlucky guy, working for the wrong firm.

FOR SEVERAL YEARS now, Feller has been paid on box-office appeal as much as for his skill and there can be no begrudging him all that he has made. He did make the turnstiles click for the Cleveland owners when he was winning all those ball games and was next-to invincible. Scarborough has long been recognized as a good pitcher, but not quite box-office.

However, Feller's crowd-appeal has been dropping steadily, in direct ratio to his failure to win 20 or more games a year. Yet his name retains enough of its magic to warrant a $45,000 salary after a season in which he could win only 15 games. And even as a comparative failure. Rapid Robert continues to set records. He is the first 15-game winner to command anything like a $45,000 wage.

For Feller, it's a $40,000 salary cut in the last two seasons since hitting his peak in 1948 when he drew $85,000 from the Indians on a basic salary of $50,000 plus bonuses based on attendance. He was fortunate enough to have an attendance-clause contract going for him that year when the Indians smashed all records by drawing 2,600,000 in their home games.

SCARBOROUGH HASN'T been so lucky. His feat of winning 13 games for the Nats in a year when the entire club could win only 50, occurred in a season when the Washington team failed to show a profit on its operations. Clark Griffith did declare a $2 dividend on each share of stock, but he had to reach into the club's surplus to do it and thus impress some of the stockholders whose support he needed at a time his control was being challenged by Johnny Jachym.

The Nats can't plead incapacity to pay better salaries, though. They're one of the most solvent clubs in the big leagues, absolutely debt-free, and without the tremendous overhead of most of the other teams. Their attendance has held up nicely and last season when they drew 720,000 fans at home it was probably a record for a last-place club in the American League.

But Griffith is taking a cold view of the actual statistics in Scarborough's record. He doesn't like that earned-run average of 4.59 per game permitted by the sturdy right-hander, and says bluntly that isn't good pitching." However, a half dozen other clubs in the league are more interested in the fact that Scarborough can win games, and would take him on cheerfully at a salary boost, not a cut.

THE INEQUITIES of baseball salaries have long been recognized. A player is never paid commensurately with his current performance. His salary always lags a year behind performance. A 20-game winner of the previous season gets a salary raise, is paid as a 20-game winner, and slumps to 10 wins. Often he is over-paid one season, under-paid the next.

A case in point is that of Joe Haynes, Washington pitcher, who was obtained via Cleveland last winter after he put in several years with the White Sox. With the Sox he had worked himself to a $17,500 salary, and the Nats took over the contract when the trade was made. Haynes was the highest-paid player on the Washington team last season. He won only two games, lost nine, and was the most knocked-out pitcher in the league.

Haynes' salary has been slashed this year, but even if he took the maximum cut of 25 per cent, he will draw nearly as much as what $17,500 salary, and the Nats tok over that contract when the trade borough is unhappy about the whole business, and wondering what a guy has to do to make good in a salary way.

Lakers Stem Caps' Rally, Win, 76-68; Mikan Has 23

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Mighty George Mikan and Minneapolis again prevailed over the Caps last night at Uline Arena but not before 3767 partisan rooters got themselves thoroughly excited.

The final score, 76-68, hardly was indicative of the tense struggle.

Caps Creep Up

Holding the classy Lakers scoreless for more than three minutes of the final period, the Caps crept within a point, 66-67, with less than five minutes remaining.

With the pressure on, Coach Bob Feerick, Bones McKinney and gangling Chuck Halbert had sparked them from a 16-point deficit.

But the Lakers' 6-foot 10-inch Mikan and 6-foot 7-inch Vern Mikkelson had the last words. Mikkelson dropped a foul shot and on the ensuing tap at the foul line, sent the ball to big George to be deposited in typical Mikan fashion.

When Arnie Ferrin converted a free throw, little Bob Martin dribbled through for a field goal to put the Lakers out of reach, 73-67.

Nichols Slows Down

After a great performance at coming from behind, the Caps were spent. Jack Nichols dropped two charity tosses for their only points in the last five minutes.

They were Nichols' only points of the second half. In the first two periods, Jack put on a fantastic one-man show. Principally utilizing his left-handed set shot from outside the foul line, Nichols sank nine baskets and two fouls for 20 of the Caps' 34 points.

His 22-point game total was one below Mikan's. Although big George claims D. C. fans are "nasty," their boos obviously don't bother him any.

In the first half, Nichols couldn't seem to miss. The misses caught up with him in the second half.

Reiser, Schaefer Near Blows

The Caps were trying hard to shake the three-game losing streak to the Lakers and spunky Chick Reiser and Herman Schaefer of the Lakers almost started throwing punches in the middle of the third period.

Just yesterday, Reiser was informed of an N.B.A. fine of $50 for "unbecoming conduct" in New York. Teammate Chuck Halbert was fined $100 and also given a strong warning by Maurice Podoloff, league president.

Schaefer missed his foul, but Reiser connected after their rhubarb. It seemed to give the Caps the impetus they needed. McKinney followed with a set shot; Feerick inserted himself and sank two goals and a foul, and Halbert added a foul as the period ended with the Caps behind, 55-62.

Then McKinney added a 5-point flurry, and only two shots by Mikan kept the Caps down. Halbert dribbled by Mikan for two tap-ins and Reiser's basket brought Washington within a point.

Mikkelson and Mikan personally saw to it that they didn't get any closer. The loss put Feerick's men below the .500 mark with an 18-19 record.

In a preliminary, a team composed of sportswriters from the Associated Press and the Times-Herald defeated The Post, News and the Star, 24-21. The losers held a 13-4 lead at one point in the second period.

Feller Takes $20,000 Slash With a Grin

Cleveland, Jan. 18 (AP).—Bob Feller, the richest but no longer the best pitcher in baseball, took a whopping pay cut of possibly $20,000 today at his own suggestion.

The fading, 31-year-old fast baller, who got into organized baseball in 1936, when still a raw farm kid from Iowa, signed to play his twelfth season for the Cleveland Indians.

A few seasons ago, Feller was knocking down around $80,000 for an alltime baseball high.

But this year, observers think he'll play for about $45,000.

The reason, explained General Manager Hank Greenberg, is that for the first time since 1938 Feller will pitch for a straight salary—without attendance bonuses.

Feller grinned happily, anyway, as he signed. So did Greenberg and Ellis Ryan, the new president of the Indians. Hank cracked:

"Now I'm getting even with Feller for striking me out so many times when I played for Detroit."

Hank Gets Serious

Then Greenberg got more serious and explained:

"You can call this a very drastic pay cut, Feller thinks its drastic, too. But he himself made the suggestion. In fact, he offered to take more than the 25 percent maximum pay cut allowed.

"There was absolutely nothing to it. We all agreed quickly on the figure after Bob showed up yesterday.

"We couldn't possibly continue paying him the kind of money he has been receiving on the basis of that performance. But if he starts winning the number of games he did in the old days, we'll be delighted to boost him back up again."

Even at that, Feller remains the second highest paid Indian, topped only by Shortstop Lou Boudreau. Lou will pull in around $65,000 on the second year of his two-year contract.

Last year, he won 15 and lost 14 after a slow start and earned around $65,000 ($40,000 guarantee plus $25,000 bonus); in 1948, he won 19 and lost 15 and got around $80,000; in 1947, he had a 20-11 record and possibly topped that.

Since Feller joined the Indians, he is figured to have earned around $500,000.

Byrd Action Won't Alter Va. Situation

The decision of Dr. H. C. Byrd, Maryland University president, to write the NCAA that the Old Liners are complying with the sanity code "doesn't alter Virginia's situation," Captain Norton Pritchett, Virginia athletic director, said last night.

"Our situation remains the same," he said. "We simply aren't complying, just as we said we weren't when this whole thing came up."

Like Maryland's Byrd, Pritchett challenged the authority of Hugh Willett, NCAA president, and Tug Wilson, secretary-treasurer, to announce that schools not complying with the sanity code would be boycotted by the "purists."

"I don't understand their statement," he said. "The NCAA convention failed to expel us, but these two take it upon themselves to tell us, in effect, we're kicked out. That's not a democratic way of doing things."

In Chicago, meanwhile, Willett and Wilson said that a boycott of the schools not complying with NCAA standards is constitutional. In a joint statement Willett, president of the University of Southern California, and Wilson, commissioner of athletics for the Western Conference, said that such action is indorsed by Article IV, Section 2, of the NCAA constitution.

In part this reads: "The members of the association agree . . . to schedule intercollegiate contests only with the institutions which conduct their athletic programs in conformity with the principles set forth . . . to establish and maintain high standards of personal honor, eligibility and fair play."

The schools accused of NCAA infractions at last week's meeting in New York are: Virginia Military Institute, Virginia, Virginia Polytechnic, The Citadel, Boston College, Villanova and Maryland.

A move to suspend them from NCAA membership failed when the two-thirds vote necessary could not be obtained.

While they are still members of the NCAA, it was emphasized that other members are not obligated to maintain athletic relations with them. However, contracts already drawn up will be honored, it was pointed out.

Ben Fades After 8th Hole; Sam Wins With 72

Los Angeles, Jan. 18 (U.P.). Steady-shooting Sam Snead outplayed a tired and erratic Ben Hogan today to defeat the bantam Texan by four strokes with a 1-over-par 72 in the 18-hole Los Angeles Open Golf Tournament playoff. Hogan shot a 76.

Snead was the soul of consistency while Hogan was badly off his game as he soared five over par. Ben did not sink a single putt of more than six feet, and he was in trouble with his drives on four holes.

The victory gave Snead $2,600 first-place money and Hogan picked up $1,900 for second place. They shared equally in 50 percent of the net gate receipts from a gallery estimated 7500 persons who paid $2.50 apiece.

For Hides Long Shots

The match was played today in a fog, and sometimes long drives disappeared from the sight of the gallery as Snead wore down his pint-sized foe. But it was Benny's muffs, not the weather or Snead's excellence, which ultimately decided the match.

The playoff, postponed a week because of rain last Wednesday, was necessitated by Snead's spectacular rally in the fourth and final round of the Los Angeles Open last Tuesday, when he shot a 66 to tie Hogan at 280.

Hogan's consistent play in the regulation four rounds, when he shot three consecutive 69s, was the opening chapter in one of the most exciting and heart-warming comebacks in sports, for little less than a year previous he lay broken and weak in an El Paso, Tex., hospital bed, on the verge of death after a highway crash.

But Snead spoiled the climax to Hogan's comeback story today.

Hogan was in trouble from the very start when his first drive went out of bounds and he had to shoot a second tee shot. He pulled out of that for a par five but Snead went one up with a birdie four. Hogan bogied the second hole when he missed a 10-foot putt and Snead parred the hole at four to go two up.

Snead's only lapse came on the fourth and fifth holes. Snead's drive on the fourth buried itself in the top edge of a trap in front of the green. He blasted out but was 25 feet short of the green. His chip shot was short by 10 feet and

Big 3d Quarter Wins for Philly

Philadelphia, Jan. 18 (AP).—The Philadelphia Warriors pulled away with a third-quarter spurt—during which they made nine of their first 12 shots—to beat the Boston Celtics, 94-86, in a National Basketball Association game tonight.

The Warriors thus climbed into a tie with Boston for fourth place in the Eastern Division of the NBA. Joe Fulks led the Warriors with 20 points.

It's Formal Now

Byrd Writes NCAA That Terps Comply

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The University of Maryland wants to be adjudged officially "sane."

Dr. H. C. Byrd, U. of M. president, said yesterday he will write the NCAA stating the Old Liners are in full compliance with the so-called sanity code, which governs aid to athletes.

When the NCAA receives Byrd's letter, which he will "get around to writing in a few days, possibly tomorrow," Maryland automatically will be stricken off the list of seven schools which either have admitted or been charged with failure to comply with the code.

Tug Wilson, secretary-treasurer of the NCAA, said from Chicago last night "Im sure Maryland will be removed from the noncompliance list as soon as the compliance committee receives Dr. Byrd's letter. I'm happy to learn he's writing us."

Boycott Not Reason

It was Byrd's failure to write such a letter than resulted in Maryland's being threatened with expulsion. The Maryland president has contended all along that Maryland is in compliance with the purity or sanity code.

"Maryland has complied with the code ever since it came into being," Byrd said. "Putting it in writing merely makes it official and formal."

Byrd's intention of writing the NCAA came within 24 hours of an announcement by two NCAA officials that noncomplying schools could not participate in NCAA tournaments or play against the "lily-white" schools.

"That had nothing to do—absolutely nothing to do—with my decision to send the NCAA a letter," Byrd insisted. "I said in New York at the NCAA convention last week that Maryland was in compliance with the sanity code. "I purposely failed to sign the questionnaire at the designated time because I wanted to appear before the compliance committee and discuss the matter with it."

Byrd, who said Tuesday he intended "fighting this through to the end," pointed out that his decision to send the NCAA the letter wsa not a retrenchment move.

Get "Record Straight"

"It's just to get the record straight. I'm determined to see this thing through, I want to have all the cards placed on the table: we want to see them there so that all schools can honorably and honestly say whether they are complying with the code."

Byrd led the fight of the southern schools to prevent the expulsion of the six other code "violators"—Virginia, V. M. I., V. P. I., The Citadel, which admitted they weren't complying, and Boston Col-

Rules Committee Puts Okay on Two Platoons

Pinehurst, N. C., Jan. 18 (AP).—The football rules committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tonight, in effect, acknowledged that the two-platoon system is here to stay and also acted to curb what it termed "the tendency toward viciousness which has no place in the game."

The committee decided to keep the present free substitution rule.

Over all, 1950 rules do not differ greatly from those in effect last season, Chairman William J. Bingham of Harvard announced.

Weiss Coy About Report DiMag Faces Cut to $75,000

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—A published report that Joe DiMaggio might be asked to take a maximum $25,000 cut from his $100,000 salary of last year brought only a cherubic smile today from George Weiss, general manager of the New York Yankees.

But, at the same time, the boss of the world champions conceded that he wished to have a little talk with the game's highest paid star before signing him for the 1950 season.

"We haven't set a date for a meeting, but I understand that Joe is coming in from San Francisco soon to cut some records for his radio program. Of course, if he doesn't come before February 1 we'll have to mail him a contract. That's the law."

'Old Pro' Signs In

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—Tommy Henrich, first baser an-outfielder with world champion New York Yankees, signed his 1950 contract today.

Terms were not disclosed but General Manager George Weiss said that Henrich was the fourth highest paid player in the history of the club, being exceeded only by Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Joe DiMaggio.

It was reported Henrich received about $40,000 last season and Weiss said "it is a cinch he wasn't cut."

Ennis Gets Record Bid

Philadelphia, Jan. 18 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies disclosed today they had offered Outfielder Del Ennis a 1950 contract in excess of $20,000—largest ever tendered a Phillies' player.

A club spokesman also said the National League team's payroll would exceed $300,000 for 1950, also a club record.

Ennis, who hit .306 last season and drove in 110 runs along with 26 home runs, said he had talked to President Robert Carpenter, but had not decided as yet whether he would accept the contract.

Great Togo Wins for Ancestors

Dear Hearts Aren't Gentle People on Mat

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

THOSE DEAR HEARTS and gentle people who wrestle in my home town—they're wonderful.

Take last night for instance. A bunch of the boys and girls whooped it up at Turner's Arena, biting hands, twisting arms, gouging eyes and so forth. But it was all in good, if not clean, fun for 2900 fans in the joint and umpteen thousands under the video spell.

The dear season opened. Violet Viann and Mae Weston, a couple of athletically inclined debutantes met in the feature. When I say met, I'm putting it mildly—they collided.

Although hardly eligible to be called junior misses, they weren't half bad, separated and on the hoof. Violet, who finally won, entered the ring a little tiger, bouncing around as if she swallowed a lively ball. In contrast, Mae slithered into her corner, a picture of sophistication, flashing her dark eyes as if she were afraid the cops were closing in.

When the starting bell rang—well, brother, things happened to these sisters. In less time than you can say Jacqueline Robinson, they hooked up and looked like a couple of mops caught in an electric fan. They way they fought, one would never believe they were fighting over one man but a composite of Clark Gable, Robert Taylor and the guy who's playing in Samson and Delilah.

ONE THING IS certain, these dear hearts don't read the wrestling rules from "Friday 'til Monday." They combine all the villainy of the men wrestlers and invented some cute and punishing maneuvers as they went along.

Violet won the match with some kind of body slam and followed by a press in 17 minutes.

The Great Togo went through all of the advertised prematch actions and topped it off by disposing of Tony Martinelli in 12 minutes. Except for the lack of a neck, Togo, the Japanese terror, looked human.

In a team match, Tiny Mills and Jack Kelly were declared the winners for some reason over Dick Trout and Ace Freeman. The show opened with Miguel Torres and Ivan Kamaroff going 30 minutes to a draw.

After the match, the phones at the arena rang continuously. Togo's ancestors were trying to find out how he made out.

Bill Bennings . . .

Dear Folks:

Once again comes a report that efforts will be made to put a dog racing track in Anne Arundel County close by the Washington-Baltimore Highway. Florida interests are said to be behind the move, promising a million-dollar plant prepared for 25,000 crowds. The group is willing to guarantee the county a million in taxes annually. This is about the umpteenth time dog racing in Maryland has been brought up. Legislation always has voted down such propositions. The flat tracks opposed harness racing. Now we can expect running and trotting forces to combine against dogs.

—BILL.

Bell Drops 45-29 Game To Western

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Woodrow Wilson's Tigers handed Chamberlain's Volts their first Interhigh loss in three starts, 46-30, in the first game of an Interhigh doubleheader yesterday at Uline Arena.

In the second game before 200 fans, smallest crowd of the season, Western defeated Bell, 45-29.

As a result of the twin bill, Wilson, Chamberlain and Western were thrown into a tie for the Southern Division lead.

Leo Speros and Everett Eynon put in set shots that broke a 14-14 tie late in the second quarter and put Wilson ahead to stay.

Chamberlain previosuly had beaten Western and Bell. Wilson holds a decision over Coolidge and was beaten by Eastern.

Jim Young led Wilson with 12 points.

Buffalo, Houston Enthusiastic About Pro League Chances

Philadelphia, Jan. 18 (AP).—Buffalo and Houston interests exuded confidence today that they would obtain franchises in the new National-American Football League but in reality their chances remained slim.

As the 13 owners and their assistants arrived for the NAFL's founding meeting, representatives of the two would-be franchises sought support for their applications.

In the lobby of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel early arrivals discussed the new franchise applications. The consensus was to take "open minds" to the meeting but the general opinion of the owners was that there is little chance of either applicant obtaining a unanimous vote of the 13 original members.

Glen McCarthy, Texas millionaire, made a surprise personal appearance in support of his Houston bid. It had been reported earlier that McCarthy was sending a representative to plead his case.

A spokesman for the Buffalo group declared: "We are very enthusiastic as to our chances to get a franchise. We feel that the city of Buffalo has done a magnificent job in getting behind this enterprise and we are confident Buffalo can hold its own."

The meeting proper was preceded tonight by a session of the rules committee while Commissioner Bert Bell went ahead with his plans for tomorrow's real fireworks.

He planned to open the meeting with a discussion of the new applications, following with division of the teams into two leagues, the American and National. Then comes the player disposition. And in Bell's own words, "it may be June before we resolve that one.

The New York Giants today met with Commissioner Bell and selected six players from the New York Yankees of the defunct All-America Conference.

Players selected by the Giants were Arnie Weinmeister, tackle from Washington; Otto Schnellbacher, Kansas end; John Mastrangelo, Notre Dame tackle; Tom Landry, Texas back; Dan Garza, Oregon end, and Harmon Rowe, back from San Francisco and Baylor.

PLAYOFF—From P. 15

Snead's 72 Beats Hogan By 4 Strokes

he putted twice for a double-bogie five. Hogan parred the hole at three to pull even.

They stayed even through the next three holes, but Snead went one ahead with a birdie three on the eighth. That was the beginning of the end for fading Ben. Gradually he slipped behind until he was four strokes off the pace after the fifteenth.

They were both on the green in two on the eighth. Hogan badly stroked a 12-foot putt and he grinned when it fell short to show that he knew he muffed it. He stopped grinning a moment later when Snead dropped his 10-footer.

Snead picked up another stroke on the ninth when Hogan three-putted. Hogan's 15-footer rolled over the edge of the cup and 3 feet past. He rimmed the cup coming back and had to take another stroke while Snead parred the hole at four.

It was Hogan's third bogey on the first nine for a 38, three over par. Snead shot a 36 for the out nine. Hogan bogeyd two more holes on the back nine for another 38 while Snead came in with a par 36.

The manner of Snead's triumph was especially gratifying to the guy people said couldn't handle pressure putts. He was in complete command throughout and his putting, although cautious, was sure and steady.

TerpsFormally Observe Code

lege, Villanova and Maryland, designated as violators by the NCAA.

Simultaneous with Byrd's announcement that he would write the NCAA was a statement from Jim Tatum, Maryland athletic director and head football coach, which also said Maryland was in complete compliance with the sanity code.

In a prepared statement, Tatum said:

"I say truthfully that the University of Maryland, is more capable of compliance with the legality and spirit of the National Collegiate Athletic Association regulations than most universities.

"So far as I know, we are the only ones, or certainly one of a very, very small minority of the universities in this country, that gives no help of any kind to any athlete except what is written in the catalogue for all to read.

"We don't have any jobs here which pay a student athlete any more than room and board," Coach Tatum continued. "No athlete who is interested in attending Maryland nor any institution which has scheduled or plans to schedule an athletic contest with a Maryland team need worry about our conformity with the NCAA or our expulsion from the same."

Tatum said he and other officials had been directed two years ago by Dr. Byrd to make any changes necessary to conform with the code.

"We did this and I am certain that no assistance has been given to athletes in the last year that is in any sense in violation of NCAA regulations," the coach reported.

The Federal Diary

by Jerry Kluttz

If you'd like to start off today with a chuckle, I recommend the reading of the delightful poem below. The Federal worker author prefers to remain anonymous.

EMPIRE BUILDER

This is the way, I'm telling you
A large percent of our Government grew.
There was once a man, who with good intent,
Gave his friend a job in the Government.
"With nothing to do, he won't stay long,"
He told an assistant, but WAS he wrong?

They found an office as it was bare,
They moved in a desk and a chair.
And so the friend wouldn't feel alone
In this office they put a telephone.
For several weeks the new man stayed
And in doing nothing, progress made.

For several months our friend sat there
With never a worry and never a care.
With nothing to do, he was on his own,
Till they gave him a girl to answer the phone.
But now our hero was in a stew
To find a task for the girl to do.

After some thinking he solved his plight,
By dictating letters for her to write.
She wrote so much, that after a while,
She had to have help for she couldn't file.
So that is how it came to be
The group in her office grew to three.

Another was added, for number three,
As good a filer as she could be.
Seemed to have something on her mind,
For though she could file, she couldn't find.
Adding this finder made one more,
And they got more space as they numbered four.

After a while three and four fell out,
Though it was comic to see them pout.
While looking for letters they couldn't find,
A rather bright idea came to mind.
So now no one is ever vexed—
Five keeps the letters all indexed.

Everything now was going strong,
When a wave of economy happened along.
When the Big Boss checked on his worthy friend
To find that the force had grown to ten.
The Big Boss' Big Boss said, said he:
"How in the hell has this come to be?"

And everyone grew pale with fright.
As reduction in force now was the rule,
But the clerks of our friend kept calm and cool.
And after all of the stir was through,
Instead of one unit, our friend had two.

And the one who gave his friend a start,
And did his best to take his part;
Yes, you have guessed it without a doubt,
He was the one who was left out.
And the friend was promoted up instead,
Until he became division head.

Still doing the same thing as at first,
He wasn't the best, he wasn't the worst.
What little he did he did with vim,
As all above thought well of him.
Knowing naught of worry or grief,
Our friend was made a bureau chief.

As bureau chief he got a break,
In a good assistant, made no mistake.
Lost at poker to prominent men,
Held everyone as his good friend.
Was very careful of what he said
Became at last, department head.

Disc Firm To Drop Deal For Transit Radio Music

'Sweet and Low' Contract Doomed By Loud Uproar; New Protests Filed

The Muzak Corp. announced yesterday it will not renew its contract to supply records to WWDC-FM for transit radio music.

This announcement came as seven petitions protesting continuation of radio broadcasts in Capital Transit streetcars and buses were filed with the District Public Utilities Commission. Yesterday was the last day for filing.

Paul A. Porter, attorney for Muzak, said the contract with WWDC-FM was signed on "an experimental basis" and will expire in May. It will not be renewed, he said, because of the "public uproar" over transit radio.

Porter said it will be Muzak's policy to discourage use of its record libraries throughout the country for such a purpose.

Other Sources Available

He said the station probably could find other sources of suitable records and Norman Reed, WWDC-FM program director, said this was true.

Reed said the Muzak records were "tailor-made" for the type of music required for transit radio. But, he added, the station has at least 600 appropriate records in its own library which can be used, can add to this supply, and can subscribe to other transcription services.

One of the seven petitions received yesterday by the PUC was from Seth W. Richardson, chairman of the Loyalty Review Board, and Huston Thompson and Abram F. Myers, both former chairmen of the Federal Trade Commission.

Attorneys Sign Petition

Their petition was also signed by Hector G. Spaulding, Thomas M. Woodward, Mary Connor Myers, David W. Richmond and Robert N. Miller, all Washington attorneys.

They claim the PUC, which approved the transit broadcasts after a recent hearing, erred in not dealing with constitutional questions involved.

All seven petitions are a legal prelude to taking the case to court unless the PUC reverses itself.

Another petition was filed by Bernard Tassler for the National Citizens Committee Against Forced Reading and Forced Listening.

This committee — which last week asked Congress to revoke Capital Transit's franchise—also called upon the Federal Communications Commission to void the licenses of WWDC and WWDC-FM.

Census Posts Open in D. C. Area Today

Want a job as a census taker? Here are the facts and figures.

About 1300 persons will be hired in Metropolitan Washington with applications taken beginning today.

The jobs will run anywhere from two to six weeks, beginning April 1, with most of them for the big two-week period, April 1-15. April 1 is census day—the day on which the 1950 count will be based.

Pay for enumerators will be on a piece basis and should average $8 to $9 a day. There will be no overtime for night work, which will be necessary.

1270 Enumerators

Of the 1300 jobs, about 1270 will be enumerators, the people who make the door-to-door canvass. The other 30 will be crew leaders who check and supervise the field work. Most of the crew leaders have already been hired.

Final selection for both types of jobs will come after oral and written tests. Crew leader appointments will be made about the end of February, enumerators about the end of March.

Qualifications for crew leaders include at least a high-school education and three years' experience "in supervising or assisting in the supervision of an office force or field crew, in training of subordinates and handling related assignments," the District Bureau said yesterday.

High-School Education

For enumerator, you must have a high-school education or furnish evidence of comparable experience, be in good physical shape, between 21 and 65, with preference to those between 25 and 45. Veterans will have preference over nonvets.

All crew leaders, but not enumerators, must pass the regular Government loyalty check. All workers must be citizens.

Here's the address of the Census office at which to apply:

District (830 jobs); 1622 H st. nw.

Montgomery County (110 jobs); 112 N. Potomac st., Hagerstown.

Prince Georges County (115 jobs); 227 Prince Georges st., Annapolis.

Alexandria and Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun and Prince William counties (270 jobs); Naval Torpedo Station, Alexandria.

Architects Ask Competition on Sesqui Plans

The American Institute of Architects yesterday called for a national competition for the Sesqui's Freedom Fair buildings, which would result in scrapping plans for the proposed "U. S. A." structures.

Over the signature of Paul A. Goettelmann, president of the Washington Metropolitan Chapter, AIA, the group said such a competition would stir national interest in the fair, expected to open April 15, 1951.

The institute pointed out that a resolution passed at its last national convention in Houston in March, 1949, suggested making the institute's services available to the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission.

AIA officials called in April on Sesqui Director Edward Boykin to make the offer and were told, Goettelmann said, no decisions had been reached on fair architecture because Congress had not yet appropriated funds.

Two days later, Goettelmann added, the Sesqui office made public sketches of the proposed three main Freedom Fair buildings, in the form of the letters "U.S.A." The buildings would be two-story structures of steel frame construction with metal panels.

Capt. Ivan. A. Bickelhaupt, project manager for the Byrne engineering and architectural firm which has been doing the preliminary work on the buildings, last night said it was now "75 or 88 percent complete."

The AIA letter was sent to Senator M. M. Neely (D., W. Va.), a member of the Sesqui Commission as well as chairman of the Senate District Committee. He has not yet replied.

Meanwhile, the Sesqui yesterday announced new dates for three free concerts which had conflicting dates with the National Symphony.

Concerts scheduled for Wednesday, February 8 and 22 and March 8 have been shifted to the following day in each case.

To Hear Jepson

1600 Storm 1st Concert By Sesqui

Helen Jepson, Metropolitan Opera soprano, and the United States Army Band last night appeared before an overflow audience in the Interdepartmental Auditorium, Constitution ave. near 14th st.

Some 1600 persons heard the program—initial Washington Sesquicentennial event, dedicated to Delaware, first State to ratify the Constitution.

In the audience were Delaware's 6½-foot Governor, Elbert N. Carvel, and Mrs. Carvel, Delaware Secretary of State Harris D. McDowell, and members of the State's Legislature and congressional delegation.

Carvel, who spoke briefly, was introduced by Senator Spessard L. Holland of Florida, member of the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission.

Blond Miss Jepson, dramatic in a black evening dress, following her scheduled four numbers sang "Zigeuner" from Noel Coward's "Bittersweet" as an encore. Her program included selections from Bizet, Gershwin and two from Puccini.

The band, led by Capt. Hugh Curry, played marches, hte finale of Dvorak's "New World" symphony, and Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture."

Master Sergt. Keig Garvin was trombone soloist in Kern's "They Didn't Believe Me," and First Lieut. Samuel Loboda led the Army Band chorus in "You'll Never Walk Alone" from "Carousel." The audience participated in the singing of Luther's hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God."

The next program in the Sesquicentennial series will be at 8:15 p. m. next Wednesday, and be dedicated to Pennsylvania. Soloist will be Margarita Zambrana, New York City Opera Company soprano.

Boys' Club Hails Clark And McGrath

Associate Justice Tom C. Clark of the Supreme Court last night told a dinner meeting of friends of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club that this is the only organization in which he has remained active.

"Since coming on the court," the former Attorney General said, "I have forsworn all other activities except this one—because I've seen the fruit it's borne, the many, many great things it's done in this community."

Clark introduced his friend and successor as Attorney General, J. Howard McGrath, to the Statler Hotel dinner meeting which marked initiation of McGrath as an honorary director of the Boys' Club.

McGrath, pledging all-out support of the Justice Department for the club, now conducting a $300,000 drive for 150,000 adult memberships, declared:

"America's greatest defense against (possible disaster in) the atomic age is the youth of today.

"The youth of yesterday was the inventor of the atomic bomb, and the youth of today will be the men of tomorrow who will decide to what use it will be put."

Turning to Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett, McGrath said:

"I know your mind and spirit so well you won't be satisfied until you have in this city a model of efficiency in regard to curbing juvenile delinquency."

Among those at the head table were David McGrath, 12-year-old son of the Attorney General; two representatives of the 17,500 Boys' Club members, Jerry Clarke, 10, and Paul Wade, 9; Major Barrett; Wash B. Williams, chairman of the campaign committee; Max Farrington, executive secretary of the club; Mrs. Joseph L. Arnold, president of the Women's Auxiliary, and Robert C. Simmons, president and master of ceremonies.

School Board Rejects Principal Nomination; Assails Terrorism

Rep. Davis Joins Education Unit Urging Stronger Laws on Gangs

School officials yesterday called for "laws with teeth" to protect school children from youthful gangs while a congressional committee promised an investigation of reports of student "terrorism."

Garnet C. Wilkinson, first assistant superintendent in charge of Negro schools, told the Board of Education that stronger laws are needed to prevent "young men out of school and out of jobs" from molesting children and from trespassing on school property.

The school official, confirming that gangs of boys had terrorized youngsters, denied there was any evidence of organization among offenders or that they were plying an extortion racket.

An investigation of the reports of juvenile terrorism was promised on Capitol Hill by Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.), chairman of the special House District Subcommittee studying crime and law enforcement in the city.

He described the situation as the "typical beginning of gangsterism" and said that juvenile crime will receive the attention of the committee.

Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning reported to the school board that under the law loiterers cannot be forced off public property.

School officials said they had received the "full cooperation of police" but that present laws are not adequate to meet the problem.

Dr. Wilkinson reported that the youths frequent junior high school buildings and accost the students at recess and when they leave the building at the end of the day.

Girls have been molested and students have been forced to turn over their pocket money to the youths, he declared.

He said that the "indecent conduct" of the youths also has been directed at teachers, principals and at students at Dunbar and Armstrong High Schools.

The Washington Vocational School for girls is bothered by boys running through the building and disturbing classes, he said.

Offenses against students have been limited to the Negro schools, board members were told. Vandalism, however, has occurred in both white and Negro divisions.

Dr. Corning said that vandals have broken into the new Sousa Junior High and Birney Elementary schools, breaking windows and damaging furniture and auditorium curtains.

Dr. Corning said that although many juveniles involved in acts of vandalism have been identified by the police, the city lacks a law forcing parents to pay for the damage.

In a two-year period 61 buildings have been broken into a total of 137 times, he told the board.

Dr. Wilkinson based his report on an hour and a half conference held with junior and senior high school principals of Negro schools.

Mrs. Obziene M. Walker, principal of the Banneker Junior High School, in a statement to Wilkinson, branded as false reports that the school was "terrorized by gangsters."

The molesting of students was first reported at Banneker Tuesday when an 18-year-old youth, John Henry Glover, 745 Park rd. nw., was held for grand jury action for forcing a 15-year-old student to pawn a wrist watch.

She said that a week ago a patrol boy at the school was beaten by a group of outsiders.

She denied that students were confined to school buildings during recess to protect them from "mobsters." They were kept in, she said, to attend a series of assemblies at which disciplinary problems were discussed.

Albert N. D. Brooks, assistant principal, who first described the accosting of students, said that he did not mean to give the impression that organized gangs were operating at the school. He also denied criticizing Juvenile Court officials as "too lenient."

At Juvenile Court, Judge Edith H. Cockrill said she had no recollection of any cases involving school playground beatings by gangs or of extortion of pupils.

Dr. Wilkinson read to the board a list of recommendations made by principals for meeting the juvenile problem.

In addition to "laws with teeth" the principals asked for additional police protection, guards for buildings and greater community awareness of the need for organized recreation for out-of-school youth.

Fight Crowding

Parents Vote Pupil Strike In Arlington

A group of 92 parents in the Henry G. Shirley Homes in Arlington County voted unanimously last night to keep their children from school next month when the new term begins unless classroom facilities are expanded.

At a session marked by condemnation of the County School Board and William A. Early, superintendent of schools, the group charged conditions in the Shirley School are worse than any in the county.

James G. Cheverton, 1421 28th st. South, Arlington, chairman of the Shirley Protest Committee, was authorized to appoint groups to canvass the 800 units of the low-income Federal Housing Administration development and gain support for the proposed strike.

School Overenrolled

Members cited figures showing enrollment of 318 pupils in the present school, which consists of former dwelling units converted to classrooms. This is 112 above capacity, putting first, second and third grade classes on half-day sessions, they said.

In February, as new pupils are enrolled, and if no additional space is afforded, fourth grade classes will go on the same basis, members noted. "It is the only school now in Arlington County which has its third grade on half days," Cheverton said.

The Shirley residents have complained to the county school officials for the past nine months, and were promised that several vacant FHA units in Shirley Homes would be added to the classrooms by February 1, Cheverton explained.

Quick Action Asked

Last night, at the meeting in the Shirley Recreation Hall, the parents complained nothing has been done thus far to prepare the units for classrooms, and unless action is taken shortly they will not be ready for the new term.

Informed of the Shirley group's action, E. J. Braun, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, declared that Superintendent Early "has told them more space will be available by February 1, and there will be. It's our problem to provide space and it's still not February 1."

He said school officials are negotiating a lease for use of the FHA units, and then would renovate them for classroom use.

Miss McAuliffe, Sister of General, Turned Down as Junior High Head

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

The Board of Education yesterday rejected a recommendation of Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning for a junior high school principalship.

It was the first time in the recollection of school officials that the recommendation of the superintendent for an appointment failed to win board approval.

The action by the board in voting against Miss Eleanor P. McAuliffe for the post was regarded as a further indication of the growing rift between a controlling majority of board members and the school superintendent.

School Board President C. Melvin Sharpe said that the five to three vote which turned down Miss McAuliffe's candidacy as principal of the new Sousa Junior High School was "no reflection on her record."

He said that a majority of board members felt that Dr. Corning should have recommended another candidate.

Miss McAuliffe, who lives at 1673 Columbia rd. nw., has been assistant principal of Paul Junior High School for six years. She is a graduate of Wilson Teachers College and has degrees from George Washington and Columbia Universities and is a sister of Maj. Gen. Anthony McAuliffe of Bastogne fame.

Dr. Corning said that he had considered the qualifications of eight candidates and had selected Miss McAuliffe.

He told reporters after the board meeting that he did not know what to do next. Under law the board cannot appoint a school officer without recommendation of the superintendent.

The Sousa School, 37th st. and Ely pl. se., will be ready for occupancy in a month. Classes that will move into the building will be organized at Kramer Junior High School February 1.

Opposition to Miss McAuliffe's candidacy was led by Board Member Adelbert W. Lee, chairman of the personnel committee.

He charged that Corning failed to back up his claim that Miss McAuliffe was best qualified for the post.

It was learned that John Koontz, assistant principal of Kramer Junior High School, had backing of some board members for the job.

The board in voting on the appointment followed a pattern that has become increasingly apparent when considering a recommendation of the superintendent.

Voting with the superintendent were Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, Dr. James A. Gannon and John C. Wilson.

Opposing the superintendent were Lee, Mrs. Velma G. Williams, Mrs. Edward C. Magdeburger, Albert E. Steinem and Dr. Philip Johnson.

The meeting was marked by bickering between the two factions over a bill now before Congress to set a $5000 limit on salaries a teacher could be paid while holding down two teaching posts.

A number of teachers teach in night and summer schools to supplement their incomes.

A sharp exchange took place between Lee and Dr. Gannon when Lee charged Dr. Corning with laxity in not bringing an earlier report on the bill to the attention of the committee.

Dr. Gannon charged Lee with meddling in the administration of the schools.

Church Votes For N. Y. Ave. Rebuilding

Members of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, last night gave final approval to a building program which calls for demolition of the 90-year-old church, and erection of an $893,000 building on the site.

The action was taken at the annual congregational meeting in the church at 1301 New York ave. nw.

The trustees were authorized to borrow $200,000 on an unsecured loan to pay expenses during construction of the building, and to obtain a $300,000 mortgage on the new church.

Newell W. Ellison, a trustee, announced that beginning February 5, Sunday morning and evening services will be held in Lisner Auditorium of George Washington University, 21st and H sts. nw. Plans as to where church school classes and other activities will be conducted have not been completed.

The church has raised more than $750,000 in cash and pledges for the new building in fund drives during the past five years.

The vote to carry on with the building program was 464 in favor, four opposed and two not voting. Later, on motion of a church member, the vote was made unanimous.

Construction of the new building, which will closely resemble the present historic structure, will take about 15 months. Razing of the old church is expected to begin within a month.

License Hearing Witnesses Criticize Divorce Detective

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

That interesting undercurrent of Washington life—the trailings of the private eye seeking divorce evidence—received an unusual public airing yesterday before the District License Board.

Occasion was an appeal from an effort to take away his license by Perry Bonner, dean of Washington private detectives, and grey-haired veteran of nearly half a century of detective work.

On recommendation of the Police Department, which reported a number of complaints had been received against him, the superintendent of licenses has refused to renew Bonner's license for this year. Pending the outcome of the board hearing, however, he continues as a licensed detective.

Three private-citizen witnesses appeared against the 62-year-old Bonner.

One, not a client, was Dick Thornburg, managing editor of the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance. He said he entered the case to "see what rights private detectives have over all other citizens."

Thornburg related an incident of strange terror in which, he said, his wife was frightened into a state of "crying, shaking, trembling" by something that occurred outside their apartment at The Dorchester, Bonner being present in the corridor.

Another was Mrs. Betty Ann Stewart of The Croydon. Johnston Fraser Stewart, former Capitol Hill law clerk, recently got a divorce from Mrs. Stewart on adultery evidence gathered by Bonner.

The third was Mrs. Izzy Munitz, 537 Quincy st. nw., who paid Bonner $40 to get evidence on her husband. She said she was obliged to go out and get the evidence.

The blonde and voluble Mrs. Stewart led the attack on the tank detective, who sat twirling his famous smoked glasses across the table from her in the District Building hearing room.

It was not enough, she said, that Bonner and her husband lay on their stomachs on the roof of a building across from the Croydon with binoculars and camera and invaded her privacy.

Bonner also, she said, while trailing her to get evidence for her husband's divorce suit, threatened her life over the telephone.

At one point she leaned across the table and snapped at Bonner: "Do you still have the key to my apartment—why don't you return it?"

The incident related by Thornburg occurred April 21, 1949 at The Dorchester, he testified.

He was downtown on business, and his wife was visiting friends. At 1 a. m. the friends left her at The Dorchester. She took the elevator to the second floor. As she walked down the corridor she suddenly, with terror, became aware that two "roughly dressed" men were following her.

Mrs. Thornburg decided not to go into her apartment, where she would have to unlock two doors, but to continue down the corridor, down a back staircase and to the lobby.

Just as she made up her mind to this, she was terrified to see a third man emerge from the back staircase and walk toward her, so she was cut off. The man had his hand behind him. Mrs. Thornburg concluded that hand held a revolver or blackjack.

"The idea of screaming occurred to her," Thornburg related. "Then she decided the man would clap his hand over her mouth . . ."

But the third man walked past her and, in a way she couldn't remember, she got into the apartment, phoned downstairs. Thornburg said he arrived home at 2 a. m. to find his wife "highly distraught, crying, shaking, trembling, chin quivering . . . she burst into tears . . ." Even with sedatives, he said, she couldn't get to sleep until 6 a. m.

One of the three men, said Thornburg, identified himself to the houseman as Bonner. He explained that he was there getting divorce evidence on a case having nothing to do with Mrs. Thornburg. The man with his hand behind him had a camera, Thornburg said.

Another witness was Lieut. Harry C. Blackman, member of the Police Department for 30 years who recommended against renewal of Bonner's license.

Blackman admitted he hired Bonner 29 years ago to obtain evidence against his wife in a divorce suit, and said all the information Bonner brought back was "what I had already told him."

But, said Blackman, personal feelings didn't enter into his recommendation.

Jury Due to Get Roberts Case Today

The defense in the "Jim Yellow" narcotics trial rested yesterday without permitting either James Roberts, 41, or his pretty 23-year-old wife, "Tinky" Evalina, to testify in their own defense.

A jury of five women and seven men is expected to receive the case today after Government and defense attorneys present final arguments.

The trial, featured by a long vocabulary (with translation) of dope peddlers' lingo and a "chalk talk" on organic chemistry, opened last Wednesday before Judge F. Dickinson Letts in District Court.

Roberts and his wife are charged with several counts of illegally transferring marijuana, cocaine and codeine, last September and October. The evidence supporting the indictments, the Government witnesses testified, was secured by Federal agents during several visits to the Roberts apartment at 744 Girard st. nw. "Jim Yellow" Roberts has been described as one of the "big fish" in Washington's dope traffic circles.

Defense Motions Overruled

The Roberts lawyers wound up their defense yesterday afternoon when Judge Letts overruled more than two dozen motions to declare a mistrial and to dismiss certain portions of the Government indictments.

First defense move was a motion to dismiss all evidence—alleged drugs reportedly picked up in the Roberts home—on grounds the Federal agents gained entrance by "subterfuge" or the equivalent to entering by compulsion," said defense attorney Joseph Lyman.

Letts denied the motion when Assistant United States Attorney Arthur McLaughlin declared the narcotics agents "were invited" by Roberts to enter his apartment. One of the agents, James Watson, was a former friend of Roberts.

Near the end of the defense's hour-long losing streak at the hands of Judge Letts, Lyman declared: "There's not one iota or whisper of evidence connecting Roberts with narcotics."

Roberts' Doctor Testifies

In the morning session the Roberts attorneys, Joseph Lyman and his brother, Josiah, put two witnesses on the stand whom they sought to qualify as experts on the chemistry and pathological effects of narcotics.

They were Dr. James R. Cowan, Roberts' personal physician, and a Federal narcotics agent, William H. Newkirk.

The physical effects of smoking marijuana, the defense attempted to show, are such that they would have been observed during the smoking parties the Government agents said they had witnessed at the Roberts apartment.

Another defense witness, Dorothy Martin, admitted under cross-examination that she and "Tinky" Roberts were arrested at the Martin home, 1333 Kenyon st. nw. on October 18 during the mass city-wide dope raid.

Defendant Put At Scene of Fatal Shooting

A witness yesterday in District Court placed defendant Fred S. Pritchett, 38, at the scene when Clyde L. King was shot to death.

The witness was Franklin W. Brown, a yard foreman at the B. & O. railroad yards here where King, a switch engineer, was killed at 3 a. m. on July 10.

Brown said King's engine stopped abruptly, five shots were fired and a few seconds later a man in white overalls walked away.

Brown was certain, he said, that the man he saw in the dimly lit yards was Pritchett.

Previously, witnesses told the jury Pritchett was wearing white overalls that night. One witness said Pritchett had a gun.

Also testifying was King's 8-year-old grandson, Edward, who said that about an hour before the shooting King and Pritchett were fighting in front of the King home at 212 Channing st. ne.

In preliminary questioning to determine whether Edward understood the meaning of an oath, he was asked what happened to little boys who tell lies.

"They go down," he replied.

"Down where?" he was asked.

"To hell," he said.

R. A. Stewart, Genealogical Expert, Dead

Robert Armistead Stewart, 72, Virginia author, genealogical expert and former professor, died unexpectedly from a stroke yesterday at the home of his uncle in East Falls Church.

Dr. Stewart, who had been in poor he alth for some time, had lived for three years with his uncle, Charles A. Stewart, 6857 North Washington blvd., but remained active in his fields of writing and genealogy.

Just before his death he had completed the manuscript of a mystery novel dealing with Williamsburg in 1711. He also was preparing a companion novel on the early Jamestown settlement, friends said.

Born in Portsmouth, Va., Dr. Stewart was the son of the late Col. William H. and Annie Stubbs Stewart, and was unmarried. For many years he lived in Richmond, Va.

Graduated from the University of Virginia, Dr. Stewart later became the youngest man ever to receive a PhD. from the institution.

Most of his life was devoted to teaching, although he left the field in 1931 to concentrate on genealogical research and writing. For many years he was a professor of romance languages at the University of Richmond. He also taught at the Medical College of Virginia, Tulane, and Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Dr. Stewart was an expert on Virginia genealogy. At one time he edited a magazine on the subject, The Researcher.

His published writings included three adventure books written under the pseudonm of Gordon Stuart. In his own name he published "The History of Virginia's Navy of the Revolution," and edited two volumes of books on the works of Edgar Allen Poe. He also was author of a book of humorous verse, "Golden Stairs."

A member of the Society of Cincinnati, he also belonged to the Sons of the Revolution and the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. In addition to his uncle, he is survived by several cousins. Funeral arrangements have not be made. Services probably will be in Falls Church.

Pvt. Harry Turner

Fellow officers will act as pallbearers today at the funeral of Montgomery County Police Pvt. Harry A. Turner, who died Monday.

Pallbearers, announced by Detective Sergt. James M. Anderson, president of the Police Association of Montgomery County, will be Capt. Charles Barnes, Lieut. Jerry Hobbs, Sergt. Charles Peter, Corpl. Joseph Ward and Pvts. Herbert Durham and Case Brandenburg. All except Captain Barnes, who commands the Rockville station, are attached to the Silver Spring station, Private Turner's headquarters.

Services wil be held at 11 a. m. at the Warner E. Pumphrey funeral home, 8434 Georgia ave., Silver Spring, with burial in Burtonsville Union Cemetery.

Wesley Giles, REA Official, Dead at 59

Wesley M. Giles, 59, regional finance head for the Rural Electrification Administration, died in the REA's medical emergency room shortly after suffering a heart attack in his office yesterday morning.

Giles

Mr. Giles, who lived at 3300 Cameron Mills rd., Alexandria, had been associated with the REA since June, 1937.

Mother Says Father of 13 Attacked Her

The Washington Post
MRS. SELMA COMPTON
Shows evidence of beating

A mother of 13 children complained yesterday that the day after she filed a maintenance suit against her husband he assaulted her.

She is Mrs. Selma Compton, of 3718 40th ave., Cottage City, Md. The husband, Howard H. Compton, is a jeweler at 1730 G st. nw.

On Monday Mrs. Compton filed suit in District Court for an order compelling her husband to support her and their children.

She said her husband left home December 19, and since then has contributed only $90 for the support of the family.

Mrs. Compton told Prince Georges County police that her husband returned Tuesday, forced his way into the house, beat her, and terrorized some of the children.

Mrs. Compton swore out an assault warrant in the county and appeared in District Court yesterday, where Judge Richmond B. Keech issued an order temporarily restraining Compton from "beating, assaulting, molesting or threatening" his wife and children.

In her petition for the restraining order, Mrs. Compton said her husband "brutally attacked" her, that her right eye is bruised and swollen, and her left eye bloodshot. She expressed fear that her husband might kill her and their children.

The petition said Compton didn't come home after December 19 to avoid paying $400 for clothing, and buying a toy for each child. Mrs. Compton said the family is in "dire need," and that her husband has $8000 in cash and an income of $500 a week.

The children range in age from 30-month-old twins to Arline, 19, the only child not living at home. She is a student at Maryland State Teachers College, Towson.

The Falls Church School Board voted unanimously last night to obtain the whole of its $700,000 school improvement fund by selling bonds on the open market.

At the same time, the board called a special meeting for 8 p. m. Wednesday in its Rust Building offices to consider teachers' salaries.

The $700,000 fund was approved last November 20 by Falls Church freeholders. Last month, the Falls Church City Fathers authorized the board to borrow part of the $700,000 from State funds.

But the board said last night it had been advised that it could save more than $40,000 by floating a $700,000 issue than by selling $150,000 in bonds and borrowing the rest from the State Literary Fund. The advice came from the Lynchburg, Va., investment firm of Scott, Horner and Mason.

City Council, however, must approve the school board move before the board can advertise for bids on bonds. In its motion, the board stipulated that the bonds are to mature within 25 years at an annual interest rate not exceeding 2.75 percent.

The school loan was proposed for construction of a junior-senior high school, an elementary school and remodeling of the Madison Elementary School.

Time and Place Set for Hearings On D. C. Budget

At least 40 witnesses are expected at public hearings on the District budget Friday in the Caucus Room of the Old House Office Building, Representative Joe B. Bates (D., Ky.) said yesterday.

Bates, chairman of the House appropriations subcommittee in charge of the District budget, has scheduled an all-day session starting at 10 a. m. Friday to hear the views of Washington citizens on the Commissioners' proposed 119-million-dollar budget for the year starting July 1.

The subcommittee is expected to wind up today its closed hearings in which municipal agency officials present details of the budget program.

Businessmen Oppose Bridge At E. Capitol St.

The Federation of Business Men's Associations last night went on record opposing the East Capitol st. site for the proposed Anacostia River bridge, backing the Massachusetts ave. location instead.

The group opposed the Capitol st. plan on the grounds that the project would "cost twice as much and would interfere to some extent with the plans for a stadium at the end of the street."

Other action included the recommendation that an item calling for the construction of a new Hine Junior High School in the southeast be included in the District budget for the coming year. The federation also opposed the United Community Services appearance in connection with the District budget items on the board of public welfare. Louis F. Frick, secretary, said that the federation felt the Community Chest Services should "keep out of politics" and stay away from the House committee when money requests are made.

The meeting was held in the board room of the American Security and Trust Co.

The Edgemoor Citizens Association returned their top officers to office at the annual election held last night at Bethesda Elementary School, Wilson ln. and Georgetown road.

Gen. Charles D. Herron was reelected president; Elmo V. Coons, vice president; and Ryder C. Ray, secretary and treasurer. Renamed as delegates to the Bethesda Fire Board were John Cole, John Hoopes, E. E. Eberhardt and James W. Cummings. New delegates elected were Robert Fleming, W. C. Doherty and John Gurke.

Columbia Rd. Group Would Join Federation

The 18th st. and Columbia rd. Business Association last night voted to become a member of the District Federation of Businessmen's Associations.

Because of traffic conjestion in the area, the association also appointed a committee, headed by J. G. Britt, to find out what locations are available for off-street parking.

Lincoln Group Urges Juvenile Court Probe

The Lincoln Civic Association last night urged the special House committee investigating crime in the District to look into the juvenile courts for "laxity which aids breeding of criminals."

Dr. E. F. Harris, the association president, said police officers had told him they frequently fail to make juvenile arrests because the penalties doled out by juvenile courts are so lenient. "Children become defiant because they know they can get away with it in the courts," he said.

The group passed a resolution requesting the crime commission to investigate, and another calling for parents to be held responsible for the children's actions, as a crime preventive. They met at Francis Junior High School, 24th and N sts. nw.

Sacrifice Held Necessary for Christian Unity

Christian unity will be attained only at the cost of generous personal sacrifice, the Very Rev. Angelus Delahunt declared last night.

Father Delahunt spoke at the first service in the annual Chair of Unity Octave at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University. Prayers for the conversion of the world to Roman Catholicism will be offered each night during the Octave, which ends on January 25.

The task of working and praying that "all may be one and that there may be one fold and one shepherd" was described as "Herculean" by Father Delahunt, superior general of the Franciscan Friars of the Atonement.

He called for "sacrifices in the spirit of atonement for the sins of disobedience, of schism, of desecration, of unfaithfulness, which have followed in the wake of disunity."

The Most Rev. John McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Washington, presided at the service and officiated at the benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

The Rev. Eugene Burke of the school of sacred theology of Catholic University will speak at the service at 8 p. m. today

$600 Ring Stolen From India Official

A second-story robber broke into the home of A. R. Palit, director of the Indian Embassy Supply Mission, at 5333 16th st. nw., early yesterday and stole $70 and a $600 diamond ring.

Police said the thief climbed over a rear porch, forced a door leading to the first floor study, then ransacked two bedrooms while the occupants slept.

Mrs Valenti's husband is manager of the famed Savoia Hotel in Rome.

Excise Taxes and You.

During the last few months the early repeal of Excise Taxes, imposed as a war measure, has been from time to time proposed.

To date, however, the Congress has taken no action to achieve that result.

We believe the continued imposition of wartime taxes is unequitable, both to you and to ourselves.

Therefore, as of this date, and until further notice, we have reduced by 10% the retail price of all of our merchandise.* Thus, from this date, the Excise Tax you pay on purchases made from us will be substantially identical with prewar taxes.

It is true that we shall be obliged to pay Excise Taxes at the old rate, but we belive that our decision will not only be helpful to you, our customers, but that it may also encourage and stimulate the early repeal of discriminatory taxes.

GUESTS at the Carlton Hotel's Congo Room Monday night enjoyed an evening of dancing—or just watching please—la Raspa. It's a Mexican folk dance which has taken Washington by storm. Miss Patricia Capehart, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Homer E. Capehart of Indiana, and her date, Lieut. George Wightman Williams, UNS, chose to watch the complicated quick-paced steps, while Miss Carlota Pardini of the Panama Embassy, and Dr. Enrique Kempff of the Bolivian Embassy (in the background) joined the couples on the floor.

Swaying, or Watching, D. C. Applauds la Raspa

A SQUARE-dance from South of the Border has caught the fancy of lightfooted Capitalites this week. Its la Raspa, a lively, exhilarating Mexican version of the Virginia Reel, which was introduced to Washington society at a gala party Monday night in the Carlton Hotel's Congo Room. Mexican Bandleader Ramon Ramos, who brought the dance to Washington, was on hand to coach dancers in the new steps. The campus crowd are enthusiastic la Raspa fans, too. When the Trinity College Spanish Club gave a tea dance Saturday at the Wardman Park Hotel, all the girls and the beaus swayed and hopped to the tantalizing rhythm.

Congressional Wives Have A Standing Lunch Date—With Each Other, of Course

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

ONE OF THE MANY nice things about being the wife of a Senator or Representative is being a member of one of the 14 Congress lunch clubs.

Back in the midtwenties, when the Sixty-ninth Congress commenced, wives of all the new members banded together, forming an informal organization which met at monthly luncheons. Since then each succeeding Congress has had its own club.

The dues run about $1 a year, the club's aim being purely social—just to provide a common meeting ground where wives new to Washington can get to know and like each other. The clubs vary in size for, naturally, when there's a big political upheaval congressionally, there are more new members.

Mrs. Lister Hill, wife of the Alabama Senator, for instance, is one of the Sixtyniners. Originally, there were about 100 members. Now the number has dwindled to around 25.

There are still in Washington a number of veteran legislators elected prior to the Sixty-ninth Congress. Their wives missed out on the fun, so some years ago Mrs. Walter F. George, whose husband is Georgia's senior Senator, gathered them all together into a special group. Once a member, always a member, and wives whose husbands leave Congress or widows can still keep contact with their friends.

The Seventy-eighth Congress wives, incidentally, lunched together yesterday and some 60 were present.

Hiss Witness Has D. C. Tie

JUDGE HENRY W. GODDARD will charge the Alger Hiss jury on Friday, so that the verdict in one of the decade's most sensational trials should be rendered over the weekend.

An important part of Judge Goddard's summing up may be based on testimony given by Prof. Henry Alexander Murray of Harvard, who is a brother of the Capital's Mrs. Robert L. Bacon. Professor Murray's job has been to demonstrate why he believes Whittaker Chambers is a pathological personality.

To assemble this testimony Professor Murray has, with Psychiatrist Dr. Carl Binger, sifted every shred of evidence, weighed every word of Chambers' testimony, analyzed the most minute details of Chambers' behavior.

Professor Murray, who set up Harvard's psychiatric clinic, started his interesting career as a doctor, then became a surgeon, finally turned attention to psychiatric study. He is, however, called a psychologist rather than a psychiatrist.

During the war, Professor Murray played an important role in OSS (Office of Special Services). He authored "Assessment of Men," a system by which men were tested before being taken on as "Cloak and Dagger" boys. Professor Murray also spent a long stint in China where he helped organize and head OSS operations.

WHAT'S BEHIND PRINCE GEORGES SCHOOL PROBLEM?

By
AGNES E. MEYER

Are we building a world worth saving when we neglect our school children? That's a question Agnes E. Meyer asks as she examines the school problems of Prince Georges County.

Add nearly 75,000 people to a county in three years, crowd the schools with 42 to 58 pupils to a teacher and you have a social crisis—one which must be solved if young people are to become constructive citizens.

With four to six children sharing a locker for their coats, with two boys or girls occupying seats intended for one, with double shifts using over-taxed school facilities, with almost half the mothers working, young people are being pushed toward delinquency.

In her articles, based on weeks of research and discussion in the county, Mrs. Meyer points out the effects on the schools of the slow reform of an outmoded county government and the straining of tax income sources.

No taxpayer, educator or parent in Prince Georges County can afford to miss this series on the vital subject of educating America's future citizens.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man Got on Wonderfully With Mother-in-Law, But Since Her Death His Wife's Four Brothers Use His Home as a Convenience, to His Dismay

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About a year ago my wife lost her dear mother, God rest her soul; she was a perfect mother-in-law. She and I got along wonderfully. Since her death, my wife, who has four brothers, has been (I must say) plain Johnny-the-gaum for them.

Whenever there is anything special to be done, plop my wife is the goat to do it. They drop in any day for a hot meal around dinner time, for my Kathie is a good cook. Okay, I don't mind once in a while, but now they want to come to our house on holidays for meals—because of my wife's cooking, "So much like Mom's," they say.

We have a 4-year-old daughter, who is a bit of a care to her mother, naturally; and I think my wife should have a share of hospitality from her brothers once in awhile. But they never say, "Come out to our house for Sunday dinner." When I try to tell Kathie they are just making a sap out of her, she cries and says, "Oh, what can I do? They are my brothers; we all have to stick together for Mom's sake."

Hates to Spoil Good Fellowship

SHE IS GETTING so thin, because the burden of sticking together is left to her. The brothers are married, have cars and children; and their wives sit back and enjoy the fat of the land that Kathie provides, while she slaves over the stove and we go broke, feeding them. And when they eat here they never offer to help with the dishes. I don't like it; in fact I resent it. Now do you call that a wrong attitude?

Kathie knows I am writing for your advice, but she says I won't get an answer. Please help me, or I'll have to find some way to tell off her brothers, and I hate to do that, because man-to-man we get along nicely otherwise. R. B.

Brothers Feel Like Lost Lambs

DEAR R. B.: Your heartfelt tribute to your late mother-in-law's endearing qualities suggests that she was inexhaustibly kind in her dealings with you, as perhaps was her lifelong practice with all male relatives she favored. Maybe she was brought up to treat men of the family as lords of creation, and to humor selfishness in them, rather than try to invoke justice for the gentler sex.

In such case, one might expect to find that her sons would be thoughtlessly selfish "boys" in adult years, especially in relation to female kin like her; and that her only daughter would follow in her footsteps almost compulsively, taking for granted that a woman's role in life is to be handmaiden to inconsiderate male "protectors" (regardless of her feelings) until she drops in her tracks.

It seems to me the significance of the brothers' clinging to Kathie's skirts, and her distrait tolerance of the extra burdens, may be explained as follows: All the "boys" and Kathie, too, feel like "little lost lambs" (despite their adult status) since the beloved mother died, which implies that she gave them a mom-type concept of "love," suckled them in dependent sentimentality rather than braced them to stand sturdily and grow uprightly by their own strength; and consequently her passing left them forlornly afloat in a vacuum, trying to recover central support in huddling around Kathie—"so much like Mom."

Handle Problem Sympathetically

TO ASSUAGE hunger for emotional security, or to pacify unaccountable feelings that life is empty, people sometimes fix on superfluous eating as a solace; and it occurs to me that "gnawing" anxiety of this sort may be bringing Kathie's brothers often to your home for a hot meal nowadays, and causing them to want to do their holiday feasting on food that reminds of Mom's,—since it's mom-solace they're still questing after.

In suggesting this clue to the heart of the matter, it is my hope to start you thinking in terms of sympathetic insight, because corrective action on Kathie's behalf, undertaken in a spirit of charity for all, should be of real benefit to her, whereas your past disposition to be jealous, grudging and antagonistic has made a difficult situation much harder to bear.

For advice, dismiss the idea of treating the problem in anger. If Kathie is thin and distracted, in need of change and rest, tell the brothers confidentially (one at a time) that you want them to help you get her to go out socially more—to take her away from her eternal slaving over the kitchen stove. Tell them your plan is to get her away from the house on Sundays and holidays for the next year or so, until she gets over the shock of her mother's death, which hit her pretty hard, etc.—and that's the graceful introductory to clamping down on their inroads. M. H.

Smith Club Meeting

"Peace as a Business Proposition" will be the topic discussed by Dr. William A. Orton, professor of economics at Smith College, at a meeting of the Smith College Club on Friday, 8:30 p. m., in the Cosmos Club Auditorium.

Ask Anne

I received a lovely copper chafing dish for Christmas, but am not sure how to use it. It has a skillet and also a deeper pan with lid. The store couldn't give any directions about how it is to be used, so I would appreciate instructions and also recipe suggestions. Would the powder that I use on my copper-bottomed pans be all right for cleaning the chafing dish, too?
M.J.H.

The chafing dish, which is really the granddaddy of electric table cooking equipment, can be the interesting center of informal entertaining. It's an ideal piece of equipment for the hostess without help, for in it she can prepare food without having to be away from her guests. Also, guests enjoy the small ceremony connected with chafing-dish cooking and the food can be served piping hot.

In your dish, does the frying pan fit over the deeper pan, double boiler fashion? Many chafing dishes have this arrangement so that water may be placed under the frying pan to prepare dishes that require long, slow cooking or for keeping food hot which has been prepared in the kitchen. Without the water basin, the upper pan can be used as a skillet.

Here are some pointers on quickly becoming a master at the art of chafing-dish cookery so you'll thoroughly enjoy using it:

1. Before attempting to use it with guests, try the recipe out first with just the family as spectators.
2. Assemble all ingredients on a tray, measuring in the kitchen beforehand those items which are used in precise amounts.
3. Fasten a list of ingredients to the corner of the tray with scotch tape for a last-minute check when combining.

Scrambled eggs, chicken a la king, lobster newburg, spaghetti sauce all lend themselves to chafing-dish cookery.

There is a book called "Cook it in a Casserole—With Chafing-Dish Recipes and Menus" by Florence Brobeck (M. Barrows & Co., Inc.) which would be interesting and helpful to you right now.

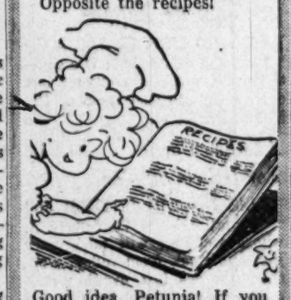
You are sure to be amused by Miss Brobeck's introduction to the section on chafing-dish cookery. She says, "The chafing dish disappeared about the time streamlined kitchens and efficiency homemaking came into being. Before that, the little alcohol-heated saucepan served as a beau catcher for sister, providing an easy way for her to show off her cookery skill on Sunday night. In the proper setting and with a carefully executed chicken a la king (mixed in the kitchen that morning by old Addie), the swain of the '90s practically fell at her feet after the first mouthful. He, poor dear, blindly assumed that she could also bake a cherry pie!". The author concludes by making this observation, "What might have happened to his country without this culinary aid to romance is not pleasant to contemplate!"

In addition to this pleasant philosophy, the book contains menus and recipes built around the chafing dish cookery.

Yes, indeed, the same powder and method you use on your copper-bottomed pans will help keep your chafing dish shining!

PETUNIA!

Menus aren't a problem now—
I make em out with utter ease.
Thanks to all the notes I've made
Opposite the recipes!



Good idea, Petunia! If you jot down in your cookbook margins the other dishes with which recipes combine happily, you've your whole meal planned.

Bishop-Bracken

Could you tell me where in Washington or nearby one can purchase a mold for making and covering belts and belt buckles in the home? I would like to make a paying proposition out of such if I were able to purchase one. B. B.

It is possible to buy button-covering kits for home use at a shop on 11th st. which can be reached by calling NAtional 0959. Kits can be purchased for making buttons in either one of three sizes. However, these kits are designed for home use and could not be expected to stand up under commercial use.

Equipment designed for covering buttons commercially is very expensive. Just to give you an idea as to the cost of equipping a commercial enterp ise of this sort, there are from 300 to 400 styles, dyes, and sizes for buttons. One machine is required to make one dye, one size, and one style, and that one machine will cost from $75 to $150.

The same firm listed above sells buckle forms in many sizes and styles to which the material may be sewed. They also have a buckle form which the material is pressed onto with a hot iron. This comes in only one style and width.

Would you please tell me how to clean rayon lamp shades that are soiled so much as to need more than brushing? They have the usual narrow rayon binding glued around the bottom just over the wire and a border or valance of wine rayon around the top. L. O. H.

Lamp shades which are sewed to the frame—not glued—can be shampooed fairly successfully. But where they are glued and trimmed with fabrics of another color—shampooing is too risky to be attempted because the glue loosens and the color in the trimming often times runs.

The most you can do to clean your shades is to dust corn starch, which has been moistened with carbon tetrachloride, over them. Have the corn starch only damp and sprinkle it over the entire shade. Let it stand for a time and then brush away. This treatment can be repeated as often as improvement is noticed.

Small Fry Fashions 'Convertible' Too

Chic Pinafores Star in Benefit Style Parade

By Peggy Preston

THE "convertible" rage has invaded the world of small fry fashions. Henceforth, the chic little 4-year-old will wear a frock that changes character with the addition or subtraction of a cunning accessory—a pinafore, sash, bolero or pair of pantaloons.

If she's party bound, she'll put a hoop in the big taffeta skirt of her best dress. When there are guests for Sunday dinner at home, her festive frock, minus the hoop, will be quite fitting and proper.

And, in the fashion of her mother, she will insist on darker cotton for summer wear in this mid-century year. Her particular version of this mode will be an organdy pinafore or navy, brown or dark green, worn over a pastel frock of gingham, dotted swiss or chambray.

ALL THIS, and much more along the same lines, was revealed yesterday at a fashion show featuring children's wear, presented in the Variety Club at the Willard Hotel. This benefit event, sponsored by the D. C. Ladies Auxiliary of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Denver, Colo., opened with a membership luncheon. The show which followed was entitled, "A Day in the Life of a Child," and displayed dawn-until-dark fashions.

No timid amateurs modeled the pretty array of clothes. These were little veterans of the stage—students at the Rose Robison Cowen School of Speech and Dramatic Arts. Their ages ranged from 3 to 6 years, and their clothes reflected the latest in preschool styles.

First set of outfits were in the slumberwear division. Most fetching of these were pajamas fashioned after a clown's costume, with great, colored dots sprinkled over the fabric. The scenes that followed showed the tots en route to kindergarten, the girls in trim plaid dresses, the boys dapper in gray Eton jackets with matching or contrasting trousers.

PLAYTIME found them in smartly tailored faded blue denims. In a series of party and dance scenes there was any number of fascinating belles, gowned in taffeta and fragile billowing organza.

Included among the models were Janine and Celeste Renaud, Noel Crane, Jan and Jay Betts, Neil Schulman, Leslie Roth, Catherine Toomey, Sandy Kadidlo, Arleen Dennis, Bernard and Debbie Boltz, Sharron and Jimmy Murphy 3d, Marie Morreale, Ellen Rodes and Cecilia Cowhig.

LITTLE Beauty of the Runway at yesterday's fashion show was Debbie Boltz, who paraded with her brother Bernie. The two wear wool knit outfits of green and red plaid, in chic 1950 style. Debbie, incidentally, retained her poise almost to the end. Then, frightened by the applause, she indulged in some feminine tears, while Bernie comforted her.

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

"SEPARATES" figured importantly in the group of little girl fashions shown by Tiny Town Children's Wear yesterday for the benefit of the Jewish Consumptives' Relief Society of Denver, Colo. Arleen Dennis, at left, models a navy and white polka dot, to which is added a white organdy apron, trimmed with eyelet embroidery. Cecelia Cowhig's pink organdy with hoop skirt is transformed with a brown taffeta pinafore, ruffled at the edge.

Top Hats, Bonnets Doffed to Senora

By Genevieve Reynolds and Nicha Soure

National heads of women's organizations and Government bureaus plus State Department officials and a large sampling of the Diplomatic Corps turned out yesterday to meet or greet Senora Amalia de Castillo Ledon, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women.

Occasion was the reception given in her honor by the Acting Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Willard F. Barber at Prospect House.

A native of Mexico City, the new commission chairman is also a distinguished poet, playwright, and author.

She wore a blue brocade afternoon dress, topped with a new spring flowered hat. In the receiving line with the honoree and hosts was Miss Mary Cannon, United States representative to the Inter-American Commission of Women.

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora de la Colina dropped by to greet their distinguished countrywoman. From the State Department came Chief of Protocol and Mrs. Stanley Woodward. Miss Nuna Lee, Miss Irene Wright and American Ambassador representative to the Organization of American States and Mrs. Paul Daniels were in the gathering, as was the Mexican Ambassador to the OAS Luis Quintanilla.

Among women leaders present were Representative Edith Nourse, Rogers, Director of the Mint Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Dr. Agnes Wells, chairman of the National Women's Party; Miss Freida Miller, chief of the Women's Bureau of the Labor Department, and Miss Anna Lord Strauss, president of the National League of Women Voters.

Others glimpsed here and there were Senorita Sara Rubio Corrona of Gaudalajara, Mexico, and the former U. S. Ambassador to El Salvador and Mrs. Albert S. Nufer.

WHETHER it was because of yesterday's springlike weather or because women like to hear about other women's work, Soroptimists turned out en masse for the annual career women's luncheon at the Willard Hotel.

Honor guests at the luncheon who briefly related the high spots in their careers were Mrs. Varilee Alexander, commodity specialist with the Bureau of Ships, USN; Dr. Naomi M. Kanof, dermatologist, and Miss Wanda Myers, assistant to the general passenger traffic agent, Southern Railway. Mrs. Agnes D. Beaton, acting director of the Automotive Safety Foundation, the fourth career woman to be invited as guest speaker, was unable to attend.

"European women represent an untapped source of good will, friendship and boundless energy," Mrs. Helen Moodie told Zonta Club members at their weekly luncheon in the Dodge Hotel yesterday.

Economic recovery depends upon the will and energy of the European worker, she said, adding that in many countries the worker is the woman.

Mrs. Moodie urged Zontians to organize more chapters in western Europe and to adopt pen friends as an aid to the Marshall Plan. "A pen in the hand of an American woman during the cold war can become the equivalent of the gun used by your husband and son in the recent shooting war," Mrs. Moodie declared.

Five Dealers Protest Liquor License Shift

Five liquor dealers appeared before the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday to protest transfer of a liquor license to 1529 17th st. nw.

John Gaines, proprietor of Pickwick Liquors, now at 1003 Connecticut ave. nw., has applied for the transfer.

The five dealers, all located in the 17th street neighborhood, declared there are enough liquor stores there now. And many residents agreed with them.

However, Frank Ridge, a real estate man, of 1630 R st. nw., submitted a petition to the ABC Board containing the signatures of 600 residents who favor the transfer.

One of the five complaining dealers was Sidney Kahnov, whose store is at 1711 17th st. nw. He testified many large apartment houses in northwest Washington have direct telephone lines to package liquor stores.

But this was not news to the ABC Board whose members said they knew of the practice and it was not in violation of ABC regulations.

Gaines said he seeks to move from his present location because he has been informed that the building where he is now is soon to be torn down.

The board continued the hearing until 10 a. m. today.

Agi Jambor Wins Ovation In Concerto

By Paul Hume

Last night's National Symphony concert got under way with the D Minor piano concerto of Bach.

Agi Jambor was soloist and won an immense personal ovation, adding an encore after the concerto. Her understanding of Bach is unusual. She successfully transfers much of his keyboard music to the piano for which it was not intended.

She played the rhythmic outer movements of the concerto with great fire and fine style. The slow mid-section was poetic, the strings behind it sounded velvety.

Lacked Warmth, Color

Two pieces preceded the concerto but they lacked warmth and color Cherubini's ancient sounding overture to Anacreon had best remained buried in its customary resting place. It has little to commend except the final few pages.

The Brahms-Haydn Variations are a different story. The rich changes Brahms wrought on Haydn's St. Anthony Chorale are among the loveliest orchestral scores. For some reason they failed to come off last night. The woodwinds were too prominent throughout, the horns, while smooth, lacked needed niceties of phrasing.

The strings sounded thin most of the time. It was casual reading except for moments of felicitous timing and balance.

Fifth Symphony Played

Prokofieff's fifth symphony closed the evening. It is a large canvas with a great color and some highly original lines. The rapid movements are the most successful. Both of these seemed slow last night. It was a well planned, but rather careful reading of a piece which needs more fire to achieve the proper climax.

Mitchell understands the music well but it takes a conductor more than one performance to put across such a work. The woodwinds and brass were completely effective in the symphony. The strings, divided by the composer, again needed more numbers.

Next week: The Beethoven fourth concerto and the Sibelius fifth symphony.

Donald L. Ranard Heads Brown Alumni Club

Donald L. Ranard of Vienna, Va., has been elected president of the Brown University Alumni Club of Washington.

Other officers, chosen this week at a meeting in the National Press Club, are: James Minicus, Arlington, vice president; Ross A. De Matteo, Washington, reelected treasurer, and Charles T. Lloyd, of Washington, secretary. George Hurley, retiring president, and Paul Howard were elected to four-year terms on the board of governors.

One on the Aisle—

National Almost Presents a Play

By Richard L. Coe

THE UNNATURAL NATIONAL almost has a play this week, but on celluloid. "Silent Dust" is a British "cinema" version of a London stage hit, but its still more a photographed stage play than a film.

Ackchully, the story behind the picture is more interesting than the way Michael Pertwee ineffectively adapted the play he co-authored.

It goes back to Wilmington a few weeks ago, where a play called "The Paragon' opened a pre-New York tryout. In the cast were John Loder, June Lockhart and Carol Goodner. But the producing Shuberts closed their import after the four Wilmington performances, despite favorable notices.

What happened was that this film version of "The Paragon" had opened in New York a few days before the play was to arrive. John Shubert stated that a contract with the British producers provided that the film was not to be released in this country until six months after the play's New York opening. Legal action is possible and the play's actors took a good sized ad in Variety to call attention to their snafu.

From "Silent Dust" one can see that "The Paragon" might possibly have had some effect as a play. It tells of a proud father who worked his way up to riches with the hope of starting a fine line with his colorful son. The war years brought the father blindness, and death in action to his son. In the young man's memory, the father plans on donating a cricket pavilion to the village.

But the young man did not die. He deserted. On his return, he's revealed as a worthless rake, but his relatives try to keep his resurrection from the father. Blind he may be, but he figures out the various clews and himself brings about the real death of his son.

Nigel Patrick Scores

Such a story requires tautness of drama which neither Adapter Pertwee nor Director Lance Comfort has supplied. Some of their technique is Early Silent and the pacing is Mesozoic.

There are, however, good performances in the film. Nigel Patrick, a London stage star, gives a dynamic quality to the returned heel, an effective performance. Stephen Murray depicts the father's change of heart believably and Sally Gray is lovely as the startled widow. But all the acting in the world can't save so plodding, outmoded a movie style.

It's a new trick for the unnatural National. Since the theater won't give the Capital stage plays, perhaps it will be so kind as to film "South Pacific," "Death of a Salesman," and "The Member of the Wedding."

"SILENT DUST," screen play by Michael Pertwee based on a play produced in England and written by Roland and Michael Pertwee; directed by Lance Comfort; produced by N. A. Bronston for Associated British Pictures Corporation, Ltd.; a Stratford Pictures Corporation release; distributed by Associated British Pathe, Ltd. At the National.

At Keith's

Technicolor Aids Maureen At Keith's

By Orval Hopkins
Post Reporter

MAUREEN O'HARA is over at Keith's Theater this week in a spectacular and enticing array of low-cut Technicolored dresses. She also sings, or appears to be singing, two-three songs, demonstrating a gift which she had been hiding from these tired old eyes, or ears, for more years than either Maureen or I care to mention.

The movie is called "Bagdad." There are a number of things to be said about "Bagdad." One is that it in no way resembles "The Thief of Bagdad," which was played by the late Douglas Fairbanks many years ago and also by Sabu, quite a while ago. Another is that it made me think of Otis Skinner, because of a raggedy party who went scraping around screeching. "Alms, for the love of Allah." Skinner played a similar role once in "Kismet."

You may have discerned that I am reluctant to discuss "Bagdad." You would be too. A young man near me was pounding his feet so loudly, early in the picture, that I was forced to move in order to be able to hear. This proved unwise. The less you hear of "Bagdad" the more blessed you should be.

It's all about Miss O'Hara, after having spent seven-eighths of her life to date in England, returns to the desert tribe from which she sprung, to find her father slain and his head kicked around like a football in the dark. She learns that a band of hoodlums known as the Black Robes have done it and suspects that one Hassan, played by Paul Christian, actually swung the knife. Turns out that Christian, who is very handsome indeed, didn't do it and is a prince besides. Vincent Price plays the villain, Pasha Ali Nadim, and even Price, generally a capable workman, couldn't save anything from the ruins. Among others in the cast were Jeff Corey, John Sutton and Fritz Leiber. I couldn't tell one from another, what with their beards, their turbans and their flowing robes.

"Bagdad's" a whacking bore and I couldn't possibly commend it to you.

A short subject at the Keith featuring Woody Herman and his band is quite good for its type. A sparkly girl sings a song about "Jamaica Rhumba" and Herman displays a little talen for easy comedy that I didn't know he had.

Robert Hardy Andrews, while we're here, wrote the play for "Bagdad," and Charles Lamont directed. Take them both out and give 'em 50 lashes across the soles of the feet, as we Bedouins say.

release produced by Robert Arthur. Screen play by Robert Hardy Andrews from a story by Tamara Hovey. Photographed in Technicolor by Russell Metty. Songs by Frank Skinner and Jack Brooks. Directed by Charles Lamont. At Keith's.

Prince Georges Defers Zoning In Woodlawn

Decision on rezoning a 22-acre tract in Woodlawn, Md., to permit semidetached housing was postponed until next Tuesday by the Prince Georges County Commissioners after a stormy hearing yesterday at Hyattsville, Md.

Members of the Woodlawn Citizens Association and the Landover Hills Town Council opposed the rezoning, contending it would depreciate values of detached homes in their areas and would encourage an influx of renters to flood already overcrowded schools.

The change was asked by Frank J. Keller, who intends to sell the property to Edwin B. Feldman, Washington builder.

John Marburger, president of the citizens association, led a delegation of more than 40 persons at the hearing.

The commissioners denied two other petitions which were opposed by large groups of citizens. These were: five lots at 37th and Otis pl., Mount Rainier, for which John F. Rick asked light industrial zoning, and a tract of 4.55 acres on the west side of New Hampshire ave., two blocks above the District Line, for which Joheph Del Maso asked light commercial zoning.

1949 Held Safest Year For Aviation

Civil Aeronautics Administrator D. W. Rentzel yesterday defended the safety record of the airlines, declaring that 1949 was the safest air travel year in history despite the spectacular crashes of the year-end.

Rentzel, who spoke at a luncheon of Chapter 1, American Veterans Committee, said last year's record of one fatality for each 100 million passenger miles flown was a goal to be striven for, 10 years ago.

"The closer we get to perfection," he said, "the more newsworthy a crash becomes."

While "not minimizing the crashes that do occur," he pointed out that it took "many years" for the railroads to reach their present safety record, which he described as about five times as good as that of airplanes now.

Rentzel said investigations into last year's spectacular crashes indicated that human error was a factor in every one. No transportation can be perfect, he said, after describing the services of the CAA and its aims.

NLRB Orders Election At Reporting Firm

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered an election among "staff reporters and operators" of the Columbia Reporting Co., Washington, to determine whether Local 2 of the Office Employes International Union (AFL) is to be their bargaining agent. The election will be held within 30 days.

The company asked that the union's petition be dismissed on the ground that the reporters and operators are independent contractors and not employes. The company reports and transcribes proceedings before Government agencies and congressional committees.

Laws Indorses Bill For New Youth Corrections Dept.

Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws of District Court yesterday indorsed a bill to set up a new youth corrections division in the Justice Department.

Laws joined with James V. Bennett, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, in recommending approval of the bill in testimony to a House Judiciary Subcommittee headed by Representative Francis E. Walter (D., Pa.).

Walter pointed out a similar measure is pending in the Senate. The measure would give the courts the choice of dealing with youth offenders, under 24 years old, through either the present penal system or the proposed corrections system.

500 ACRES located in the zone of the new South Capitol Street Bridge. This bridge is now open for traffic to 50,000 capacity of automobiles per day. This ground is located 4 sq. beyond the District line in Maryland. This bridge brings this property about 2 miles nearer the heart of Washington than the old 11th Street Bridge. It also brings this property in about 12 minutes by automobile to the heart of D. C. 95 acres of this land can be used for cemeteries. Cemetery ground when well developed retails at about $200,000 per acre. So do a little figuring with your pencil and see what that amounts to. The remainder of this ground is suitable for commercial purposes; cost home building. Commercial ground in the zone of the Virginia end over the Potomac River Bridges worth around 1500:000 an acre. One of the vice presidents of the Riggs Nat'l Bank bought 30 acres over the Memorial Bridge for $30.000 and sold it to the Government for $1.500.000 and that was accomplished by condemnation jury. A farmer bought a farm over there for $3.000; is now worth more than a million dollars. Take a ride over the new South Capitol Street Bridge to the District line, look ahead of you and you will see a big woods, that's my 500 acres, and if you will also take a look you will see about 100 million dollars worth of apartments and houses closing in on 3 sides of my property. This is a young man's job to subdivide this land. I am in my eighty-third year and I would not undertake it. If you have got good credit and a modest amount of cash you can buy this property, the balance of the purchase price to be secured by a purchase money mortgage with a 4% interest clause so you can pay as you go. Fulton R. Gordon, owner, 1427 Eye st. nw., DI. 8230. Home telephone, WO. 0933.

I have been in the land development for nearly two thirds of a century and have developed Chevy Chase, D. C., was my largest development. I paid $800.000 for 400 acres. Now 1 acre of that same land, this is located at Conn. ave. and McKinley st. is worth more than what I paid for the 400 acres. That will give you an idea of what you can do with land when you develop it. Brokers' Attention.

Bill Asks for Shopping News Tax Relief

John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), House District Chairman, yesterday introduced a bill to exempt the Washington Shopping News from payment of the District sales tax.

McMillan said he acted at the request of Herbert G. Pillen, attorney for the Shopping News, and president of the Controlled Circulation Newspaper Association.

Pillen explained that Shopping News, whose stockholders are Washington merchants, in effect buys its publication from the printer, Mercury Press, Inc. a separate corporation, and pays a sales tax on the product.

Pillen pointed out. Shopping News is distributed free. The bill was sent to the House District Committee.

McMillan also introduced a new liquor price-fixing bill for the District. Similar bills have been blocked in the House previously.

The bill would legalize price-fixing contracts among liquor producers, wholesalers and retailers. Anyone cutting prices below contract levels would be subject to a damage suit, even though not a party to the contract. The bill went to McMillan's committee.

'This I Remember'

Christmas Was Busy Season for Roosevelts

This is another installment of the serialization of "This I Remember," the nonfiction best seller in which Eleanor Roosevelt tells the story of Franklin D. Roosevelt's career, from 1924 to his death in 1945. Succeeding installments will be printed in The Washington Post through February 4.

By Eleanor Roosevelt

I BOUGHT toys by the dozens, ordered the candy and cakes and ties or handkerchiefs well ahead of time. The lists of employes and their families, with the names and ages of the children, were furnished me by the housekeeper and the ushers. Early in the fall the gifts for the children were wrapped in tissue paper and the names attached. Then other gifts were wrapped and Christmas cards addressed for each person, with the money enclosed. This was really a big job and had to be done carefully, for I wanted no one to be forgotten.

In addition, of course, I had my personal Christmas gifts to prepare and, though I often stood on my feet until the small hours of the morning, wrapping Christmas packages was a task I always enjoyed. When my friends came to stay I often asked them to spend an evening helping me wrap packages in the Christmas closet. Some of them still mention it to me as the Christmas season approaches.

I usually went to Hyde Park for a day during the week before Christmas. I could have mailed our gifts, but it meant a great deal to me to distribute them personally to the people who lived on the place or who worked for us.

Later, after the Military Police School was established at Hyde Park, we held two evening Christmas parties in the library for the soliders who were stationed there and did guard duty as part of their military training. Franklin was much amused by some of the new recruits who, when they saw him for the first time, completely forgot how they had been taught to salute and found new and original ways to hold their guns.

One very stormy evening the entertainers, the music, even the girls who were invited to the dance, arrived very late because of the snow and ice. So after we had sung carols for a while I asked my husband to tell the men some stories of World War I and anything he felt he could tell about World War II. The soldiers had such a good time listening to him and asking questions that when the music and girls arrived they were disappointed at having to end the conversation.

Christmas a Busy Day

CHRISTMAS Eve in Washington was usually a busy day for me. I started by going to a party for underprivileged children given by the welfare council at the National Theater. Then I joined my husband to wish all the people in the executive offices a Merry Christmas.

Usually at lunchtime I had to be at the Salvation Army headquarters, where we had a service just before the food baskets were given out. I am afraid that during the depression years these services had an unchristian effect upon me, because invariably before receiving their baskets the poor recipients were told how grateful they should be. I knew if I were in their shoes I would be anything but grateful.

After leaving the Salvation Army headquarters I usually went to the Volunteers of America, where the same sort of food baskets were distributed. Then I returned home in time for the afternoon party in the East Room.

After the party my husband and I and whatever family was with us went to the lighting of the community Christmas tree, where my husband broadcast a Christmas message. He returned to the White House, while I went on to a Christmas tree in one of "the alleys" (the slums of Washington), where again we sang carols. As I looked at the poor people about me I could not help wondering what Christmas could mean to those children.

At home I would find my husband reading Dicken's Christmas Carol to the family. He usually finished it after dinner. Then there were stockings to be filled, and finally Miss Thompson and I nearly always went to midnight services at the St. Thomas Church.

The last two years during the war we went to Hyde Park for Christmas. The grandchildren who were staying with us while their fathers were away preferred it to being in Washington.

Returned to Washington

AS SOON as the holidays were over we went back to Washington. My husband liked to be in the White House on New Year's Eve. We always asked a few friends in, and at midnight in the Oval study the radio was turned on. There we waited with the traditional eggnog in hand for midnight to be announced. Franklin always sat in his big chair and, as President, would raise his glass and say: "To the United States of America." All of us stood and repeated the toast after him. Somehow the words were strangely meaningful and impressive in that house and gave an added touch of solemnity to the personal greetings that followed.

In 1937 my husband asked our eldest son, James, to come to Washington as one of his secretaries. James was delighted. He had always been interested in politics and considered the opportunity to help his father a great chance to learn much and be really useful in the Administration. James could not see any objections to the plan, but I was appalled at the idea. Only too well could I foresee the attacks that would be made on his father and on James himself for accepting. Then, too, I could imagine a number of ways in which James, through his necessarily political activities, might get himself and his father into trouble.

I protested vehemently to his father, saying it would be a selfish thing to do and that James would suffer. I talked to James and tried to persuade him not to come. But in the end I was silenced by a single question from my husband. "Why should I be deprived of my eldest son's help and of the pleasure of having him with me just because I am the President?" he asked me. What he said had a point, I admit. Nevertheless I was still unhappy about the appointment, and I think my fears were justified by what actually happened.

Jimmy did a good job, and it meant a great deal to Franklin to have him by his side, but from the start he was more vulnerable to inevitable jealousies and rivalries than were the other secretaries. As a result of the work and anxiety he developed ulcers of the stomach and in September, 1938, went to the Mayo Brothers' Clinic in Rochester, Minn., where he was operated upon. Franklin, with his usual necessary entourage, arrived at the hospital on the morning of the operation. I still remember the hours of anxious waiting while the operation was performed and afterward until the doctors came from the laboratory reporting that nothing malignant had been found. They added, however, that nervous strain was bad for James and advised him not to return to his duties at the White House. I was very much relieved when he agreed to accept their advice.

Harry Hopkins was also in the Mayo Clinic at this time, so my husband and I visited him as well.

President Very Calm

FRANKLIN was very calm, as he usually was in a crisis, and chatted as though nothing were on his mind. I, too, can always be calm and quiet under stress, but it takes all the discipline I have acquired in life to keep on talking and smiling and to concentrate on the conversation addressed to me. I want to be left alone while I endure a time of crisis or misfortune and store up fortitude for what I apprehend may be a blow of fate. However, I have learned to feel one way inside at such times and outwardly to go on like an automaton.

Franklin did not talk a great deal about the work he was doing, either at meals or in private family conversation. Most of us felt that when he was with his family he should have a respite from the concerns of his office. However, if a subject came up when people whose opinion he wanted to ask were preesnt we would learn something of how he felt about the matter.

When an Administration bill was up before Congress we learned to expect an increase in the number of Congressmen coming to his study in the evenings.

Only bills that were "must" legislation got full Administration support. In the first years these were largely economic or relief measures; in later years they were measures for defense. I remember wanting to get all-out support for the anti-lynching bill and the removal of the poll tax, but though Franklin was in favor of both measures they never became "must" legislation.

Franklin would simply say: "First things come first, and I can't alienate certain votes I need for measures that are more important at the moment by pushing for any other measure."

Often people came to me to enlist Franklin's support for some idea. Although I would present a situation to him I never urged on him a specific course of action, because he knew of factors in the situation as a whole of which I might be ignorant. While I felt strongly on certain subjects, he often refrained from supporting causes in which he believed because of political realities. There were times when this annoyed me very much. I would do all I could for the people who came to me short of stating what my husband might think or feel, and he never asked me to refain from speaking my own mind. For that very reason, I suppose, in spite of my protests to him I frequently was more careful than I might otherwise have been. I felt he was in a position to evaluate the essentials of his program and that I had no right to endanger that program by any action of mine.

Little by litle, however, I found that people looked upon me as having a point of view of my own, with which Franklin did not necessarily concur. After I was convinced that this was so I felt freer to state my views, for I knew that people would not think that I was just a mouthpiece for my husband!

Hardware Store

The hardware store is where we buy . . . The items large and small . . . That fix the premises at home . . . From living room to hall . . . The doorknobs and the nails and screws . . . The kitchenware and mop . . . And what it takes to keep a door . . . From slamming to a stop . . . And then there are the garden tools . . . The spade and fork and hoe . . . That do their part to keep away . . . The weeds that want to grow . . . The hose and sprinkler that convey . . . The water to the lawn . . . And showers for the children when . . . The heat is really on . . . The hardware store is valuable . . . And practical and good . . . Because it fills so many needs . . . For every neighborhood.

THE DISTRICT LINE

by Bill Gold

Have Some Buttered Puns With Your Breakfast

The first Senate test on oleo legislation has resulted in a 48 to 37 defeat for the dairy interests.

You might say that the butter bloc lost by a narrow margarine.

Or do you think that's spreading it on too thick, and that I'd butter let well enough alone?

MATCHLESS PERFORMANCE

We keep a mate-less glove for years,
Ere in the trash it's tossed.
The minute that it's hauled away,
We find the one that's lost.

Jean Broulik,
3850 39th st. nw.

VERY APPROPRIATE

David Kandel of 1311 H st. nw. takes note of the suggestion that Transit Radio musical selections should include popular song hits. He comments:

"I suppose the idea is to have the standees 'Swing and sway with Sammy Kaye.'"

PHONE LINES

A couple of weeks ago I printed an item about one of our reporters who tried to call his home in Silver Spring from Falls Church, only to run into a lengthy delay on all "long distance" calls.

Several readers pointed out that, from Washington, one can dial all contiguous areas; and that all the nearby suburbs can dial Washington numbers. What's more, they can dial numbers in other suburban areas, so long as they are "contiguous." (There's that word again.)

But when Falls Church and Silver Spring get hooked up, that requires the services of an operator, because that's a "zone" call, and subject to extra charge.

The Bell System has recently developed an unbelievable gadget known as AMA. It's called the biggest thing in the telephone industry since the advent of the dial.

AMA is an abbreviation for Automatic Message Accounting. You dial your number without bothering the operator, and AMA automatically remembers who made which calls, when, the number called, the length of time the conversation lasted, and how much you owe.

It's all done on long paper tapes, with AMA adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing; and if the engineers set their minds to it, they could probably also teach it to sing "Mammy."

We don't have AMA in this area because it costs a young fortune to install, and the volume of "zone" calls isn't large enough to warrant such an investment.

So for the time being we'll have to get tangled up in those "long distance" delays on a few days each year, even though we're just calling from one suburb to another.

However, when Mrs. Melvin A. Brenner of 537 Monticello dr., Falls Church, Va., encountered difficulty in getting a Silver Spring number on that same day, she tried another tack.

Mrs. Brenner dialed the Silver Spring number, the special operator immediately cut in to ask "What number are you calling please?" and when she was told, she put the call through.

VAGRANT THOUGHT

Every time the Ohio River goes on a rampage, I get homesick.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Playful 5-month-old part-police dog, used to children." (Fairfax 77-W-12.)

"Two well-mannered coal-black kittens." (Hobart 8496.)

DO WE DETECT A NOTE OF BITTERNESS HERE?

Audrey Teele, of 3713 Jenifer st. nw., has an answer to the chicken-and-egg problem of whether Capital Transit should reduce service as business falls off or improve it to attract new business.

A company spokesman recently answered a reader's complaint with the observation that if more readers were riders, the service would be better. Audrey cracks back with:

"As I understand it, his answer is that you can wait more, hear more, stand more, push more and pay more if you ride more."

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Maisie Roach of the Investment Building says we mustn't be critical of our Congressmen, because they're really very clever. As she puts it:

"Notice how they slash here and there with their pruning knives without ever cutting themselves?"

'Republicrat' Group Gags Rep. Sabath

By Drew Pearson

Here is how the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition is riding roughshod over the right of free democratic processes in the House of Representatives.

Meeting behind closed doors in the Rules Committee, the Republicrat coalition not only demanded the reinstatement of the old gag rule by which the committee can bottle up any bill, but even refused to let Chairman Adolph Sabath of Illinois, who opposed the gag rule, speak.

Each time the 83-year-old Sabath started to talk he was shouted down with cries of "Vote! —Vote!" by Democrats Gene Cox of Georgia and Howard Smith of Virginia and their Republican cohorts. Finally, GOP Congressman Leo Allen of Illinois took pity on the little chairman.

"He has a right to talk," pleaded Allen, above the bedlam. "Let him speak for two or three minutes."

Sabath didn't appreciate the humor in this. He was so riled by the rough-house tactics of the coalitionists that he almost choked up.

"We ought to at least have a public hearing, so that opponents of this resolution can be heard," he demanded. "This is a matter of vital concern to every member of the House. Since we repealed the gag procedure last year, this committee voted out 55 rules on bills and resolutions, the greatest number in history."

Fair Dealer Backslides

However, Sabath's motion to postpone action on the Cox resolution and to give House members a right to testify for or against it at a public hearing was defeated by a 7-4 vote. The three members who joined Sabath for a free discussion were Democrats Ray Madden of Indiana, John Lyle of Texas, and James Delaney of New York.

The seven who voted for immediate action without a public hearing were Democrats Cox, Smith and William Coler of Mississippi, and Republicans Allen, Clarence Brown of Ohio, James Wadsworth of New York, and Christian Herter of Massachusets.

Lyle of Texas and Delaney of New York, however, backslid into Republican ranks on the final, 9-2 vote for the gag rule, leaving Sabath and Madden standing alone against it.

Not Protected

From the Nation's rogues galleries, the Children's Bureau has dug up a shameful, shocking story. It is a side of American life that isn't generally known, but the bureau estimates close to 100,000 children were thrown into adult jails last year alongside hardened criminals.

Youngsters were even found shoveling dirt on road gangs and serving sentences in State penitentiaries. These were not mere isolated cases, but might have happened right in your home county, for in 34 of the 48 States children were discovered in jail with grown-ups despite the fact that most of these same States have laws protecting children from such treatment.

Just across the Potomac from the Capital, the Children's Bureau found 14- and 15-year-old boys working on the road gang in Fairfax, Va.

In fact, 2650 Virginia youngsters were herded into the same jails with adult prisoners during 1948 —some going back as many as four times. This is the State, incidentally, that is run by Senator Harry Byrd's efficient political machine.

A much better method of handling young lawbreakers has been worked out by the Big Brothers of America, now celebrating National Big Brother Week.

Volunteer "Big Brothers" are selected from prominent citizens in each community who are willing to put a friendly arm around a wayward boy. Their individual guidance saved more than 5000 boys from a life of crime last year —less than 7 percent of the boys who have been given this individual counsel have made second missteps. Yet the cost is less than $45 a year for each boy—for club dues, camp life and vocational guidance. This is only a fraction of the $2000 it costs to keep a boy in a reformatory for a year.
